FOR COMPULSORY LOANS.

Banker Suggests Nation's Financial Resources Be Mobilized.

The latest proposal for the mobilization of the nation's financial resources is the development of a system of universal compulsory loans to the Government by all the people, in proportion to their individual incomes, thus carrying into the realm of finance the principle of universal compulsory service already enforced in the military field. This proposal is put forward by George H. Barrett of the financial firm of Bonbright & Co., and he argues for it on the same ground used by proponents of compulsory military service—that it is the most democratic method.

"Since the greater part of wealth is in fixed form," says Mr. Barrett, "this would involve borrowing the amount of bonds through banks, which would extend the credit to the Government. Money would not be necessary for the payment of such tax, and in fact there would not be sufficient money in the United States to make such a payment.

"On the basis of 10 per cent. of capital, the purchase of $25,000,000,000 of Liberty Bonds would be provided by the creation of $25,000,000,000 in credit. A man with $100,000 of capital could go to a bank and borrow $10,000. With this he would purchase a $10,000 Liberty Bond, or his proportion of the issue, the bank retaining it as additional security for the loan.

"The plan is democratic, since it applies an equal burden to all property in the country. It corresponds to raising an army by conscription. A man does not permanently enter the army, but his funds are permanently taken away under the ordinary methods of taxation. He merely lends his services compulsorily, as under this plan he would lend his capital for a limited period."

Drops Bernstorff from Honor Roll.

LANCASTER, Penn., Nov. 24.—At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of Franklin and Marshall College, Count von Bernstorff's name was stricken from the rolls. The degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred upon him in 1912. The college, in proportion to enrollment, has sent more students to serve the nation than any other college.

SURE PAPER PRICES WILL BE ADJUSTED

Editor and Publisher Quotes Members of Congress as Favoring Smith Resolution.

EXPECT FEDERAL CONTROL

Amicable Agreement May Bring About Fair Prices, Profits, and Distribution.

The prediction by those familiar with the situation that the price of newsprint paper would soon be fixed, either by voluntary agreement or Federal legislation, was made again yesterday by The Editor and Publisher, a weekly paper in close touch with the situation.

"A solution of the differences between manufacturers and publishers on lines involving a form of Federal control and regulation of distribution and prices on lines contemplated in the Smith resolution has been under consideration," it was said by The Editor and Publisher. "For obvious reasons the details of this plan cannot be revealed at this time, as nothing definite may be accomplished pending the disposition of the trials of the manufacturers in the Federal courts. The positive assurance may be given at this time, however, that the things which the Smith resolution aims to accomplish—the restoration of reasonable prices for newsprint, based upon manufacturing costs at the present time, and allowing a fair margin of profit for the manufacturers—are to come to pass, if not through the enactment of the proposed law, then even earlier through an amicable adjustment of the whole situation, through which hearty co-operation will be restored between makers of newsprint and their customers, under ample safeguards for all interests involved.

"That leaders of the Congress are deeply interested in the newsprint situation, and stand ready to support the Smith resolution for Federal control, or any other legislation which may help to restore normal conditions in the newsprint market, is indicated by the tone of the responses received by The Editor and Publisher to the recent letter sent to members of the two houses at their homes."

The Editor and Publisher added communications from a number of Senators and Congressmen in which they promised outright to vote for the Smith resolution or manifested a favorable attitude toward it. Senator Smith of the Committee on Printing introduced his resolution just before the adjournment of the last Congress, and it will come up for consideration as soon as the next Congress opens, unless the print-paper situation has been brought to a satisfactory state before that time.

It is generally believed that when the paper manufacturers indicted for violation of the Sherman anti-trust law are arraigned in the Federal District Court tomorrow a state of affairs indicating the early settlement of all issues will be disclosed.

Stop Printers' Ink Commissions.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—Manufacturers representing 90 per cent of the American production of printers' ink today voluntarily agreed at a hearing before the Federal Trade Commission to eliminate commissions on sales. It is said the agreement will result in a reduction of thousands of dollars in the cost of marketing the product.

Facts About Our Wonderful Sales Last Week

We think it is fair advertising to always tell the truth. That is why we state facts about the women's apparel we offer. The truth often hurts the other fellow, but never the fellow who tells it.

A recent experience in the open market—open to every merchant—provided us with a great number of dresses that we could afford to sell at $5 each and a great number of coats that we could afford to sell at $10 each.

The dresses were made to sell at wholesale from $7.50 to $10—we sold them at $5—and the coats were made to sell at wholesale from $8.50 to $16.00—and we sold them at $10.00. They were good dresses and good coats, worth the price at which the manufacturers had previously sold them.

Following our policy of assembling on our sales floors above the street level the very best women's apparel we can buy to sell at prices which the average women now wants to pay, we bought all of these dresses and coats that we thought we could sell. We sold the entire lot in short order and our customers are delighted. We do not need to make a big profit, because our expenses are small and we buy and sell for cash.

This extraordinary sale of dresses and coats attracted wide attention, and we were not surprised, therefore, to receive visits from merchandise experts who evidently thought we were camouflaging. These experts were compelled to admit that the values were as we stated them. Yet they could not understand why some other house had not seen their value and bought them.

As to that, every merchant has to use his own judgment. If he misses an opportunity and we grasp it, we are able to make a big and successful drive and give the benefit to thousands of customers.

We admit frankly that we are trying to make our salesrooms the very best Market Place for women to buy the Very Best Merchandise and thereby become known as the Best Popular Priced House in New York.

Thousands of women are practicing rigid economy in their wearing apparel, and we take pride in the fact that we are specializing to assemble the articles that will give them style and service at prices they want to pay.

We regard it quite as dignified to be good merchants for the women who want to invest a very small amount for their apparel as it is to be good merchants for those women who are willing to pay a larger amount.

Please remember that we study the market to meet your needs as to style, price and quality, and you will find our salesrooms stocked with assortments that will make it easy for you to get what you want.

UPHILL FIGHT LOST BY COMMERCE TEAM

LINE PLUNGING EFFECTIVE

Local Eleven Pounds at Visitors' Defense and Finally Is Rewarded by Two Tallies.

The football team of the High School of Commerce was defeated by the more evenly balanced East Orange High School eleven in a hard-fought game yesterday on Olympic Field by the score of 13 to 12. Battling uphill almost from the start, the local high school lads in the last quarter pulled themselves together and were saved from a shut-out defeat.

Desperate line plunging, the style of play which had failed of results throughout the three first quarters, finally caused the East Orange aggregation to weaken. With only seven minutes to go, Commerce broke through the visiting team's defense for two touchdowns. Both attempts at goal made by Sampson went astray, and the whistle found Commerce trailing in defeat by one point.

STEPHENSON HIGH AT TRAPS

Breaks 99 Out of 100 in Scratch Event at N. Y. A. C. Shoot.

Frank B. Stephenson, a former marksman of the Crescent Athletic Club, made an exceptional score at the Travers Island traps of the New York Athletic Club yesterday. The Brooklyn expert ran 99 out of a possible 100 targets for the high scratch prize of the day. He also scored legs on the Travers Island, the Hasnn, and the Accumulation Cups with strings of 25. In the last event he shared honors with O. C. Grinnell.

Notwithstanding his excellent work, Stephenson was not fortunate enough to win any of the trophies that have been running throughout the month. The Travers Island prize went to R. L. Spotts, the former national champion, he winning the trophy on a shootoff.

T. J. McCahill took the November Haslin Cup with two legs, and E. M. Leask, by scoring his third leg yesterday, annexed the club trophy. The high handicap was C. McLeod.

PENN CUBS BEAT CORNELL.

Rosetsky Plunges Across Line for Only Touchdown.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 24.—The Pennsylvania freshman team defeated the Cornell Cubs by 6 to 0 at football this afternoon. The Quaker backfield was faster and it surpassed Cornell in line plunging. The Penn score was made in the second period, when Pierce ran back Wahl's punt to Cornell's 45-yard line. Line plunges by Rosetsy and Zucker, and a ten-yard gain by Miller on a double pass took the ball to Cornell's ten-yard line. Rosetsky plunged over for a touchdown.

The lineup:

POLY PREP RUNNERS LEAD.

Bernard Victor in Brooklyn Cross-Country Title Chase.

Harriers of Poly Prep School won the annual Brooklyn high schools' championship cross-country run held yesterday over the Prospect Park course of about three and one-quarter miles. To the school went the team championship, and Paul Bernard also gave Poly Prep the individual championship. Poly Prep's winning score was twenty-one points.

Forty-nine runners, representing six Brooklyn high schools, started in the race, and all gave way to Bernard. He went to the lead in the first mile, and retained the pace-setting position to the finish to win by about 100 yards from a schoolmate, P. Reynolds. Bernard covered the distance in 18:12 2-5, slightly less than the course record. Manual Training and Erasmus Hall High Schools each entered two teams. The Erasmus first team was second with fifty-five points, and the Manual's first team was third with sixty-six. Commercial was fourth with 152 points.

Poly Prep team also won a trophy offered by Paul Keith to the school whose athletes returned the lowest score.

IN AID OF BILLIARD FUND.

Exhibition at Doyle's Brings $51 Toward Purchase of Ambulances.

In the first local endeavor for the Billiard Players' Ambulance Fund at Doyle's last night $51 was collected by Frank Cole, Chairman of the committee, at Doyle's at an exhibition smoker pool match in which Howard Shoemaker, national amateur pocket billiard champion, and Damon Runyon defeated Alfredo De Oro, professional three-cushion champion, and William Farnsworth by 125 to 110. Shoemaker had a high run of 25, De Oro one of 21, Farnsworth one of 15, and Runyon one of 12.

WAR DOG AT BENCH SHOW.

Battlefield Hero Fails to Get Ribbon at Madison Square Garden.

American flags and shields with the Red Cross insignia were the chief adornments of the club room of Madison Square Garden yesterday, at the third specialty show of the German Shepherd Dog Club of America, held for the benefit of the American Field Ambulance Corps. There was a good attendance and Mrs. C. H. Yates, President of the club, and her coworkers, felt that all their labors for the war fund had been well worth while.

One war dog limped into the ring for the open class for dogs, Mrs. Claude Pinney's Marshall French, the disfigurement being the result of a bullet on the battle lines not so long ago. At shows, however, the ribbons go to the best looking and war valor does not count, so Marshall French did not gain one of the ribbons.

All the classes were large, ranging from twenty to thirty-five dogs in each, and Vinton P. Breese, the sole judge, had a hard day's work. He has judged in all parts of the country, but, in his opinion, the aggregate was the best and heaviest in numbers that any American show has ever had in the breed. Every dog benched is at the disposal of the War Department when needed for our soldiers.

The winning dog puppy, T. Ward Wasson's Othello von Edelweiss, celebrated his first birthday at the show, but was eligible as being still under 12 months when the entries closed. In American-bred dogs the winner was H. F. Godfrey, Jr.'s, Otto, later third in the limit and fourth in the large open class. This dog was perfect in body and expression, although a bit thick in the head, and was benched for the first time.

John Gans, Jr.'s, Komet von Hoheluft, very typical, and adding to a grand conformation the furtive movement that is highly regarded in a police or war dog, won in American-bred and limit dogs. Mr. Gans's ch. Harras II. of Elmview captured the open and winners' classes, in the latter the nice specimen, Frank Spiekerman's ch. Max, being reserve.

Benjamin H. Throop's Hero of Elmview, well up throughout, won the bred-by-exhibitor class, and his Tosca of Elmview made a sweep of the American-bred, open, bred by exhibitor, and winners' classes for bitches, which will be good news to the owner, who is under arms as a volunteer private in a Pennsylvania regiment.

COMMERCE HARRIERS WIN.

Beat De Witt Clinton in Annual Cross-Country Race by 19 to 41.

The cross-country team of High School of Commerce turned the tables on the harriers of De Witt Clinton H. S. in their annual dual road race, held yesterday morning over the Commerce course of about two and one-half miles, and won with a point score of 19 to 41. This was the final chase of the season for Commerce. Part of the race was run through Central Park.

S. Blumberg led the Commerce team in its victory. He led from the start of the run and crossed the finish line in winning position in 14:17. Two schoolmates, M. Cohen and T. Gorey, trailed him over the line in second and third positions, respectively. The first Clinton runner to finish was N. Nicolaidas, who finished in fourth place.

CLINTON NATATORS VICTORS

Take First Place in Every Event Against Townsend Harris.

De Witt Clinton High School's swimming team triumphed over Townsend Harris Hall in a dual competition yesterday morning in the West Sixtieth Interior Baths by 39 to 14. De Witt Clinton swimmers were first in every event and easily showed superiority. H. Hartman won the 220-yard swim, but finished only a slight margin ahead of R. Pfeiffer of Townsend Harris Hall.

Flushing Harriers Beat St. Paul.

Flushing High School cross-country team triumphed over the St. Paul's School harriers in a dual race yesterday over the latter school's course of about two and one-half miles, at Garden City, L. I., by a score of 16 to 39. A. Tracey of Flushing High School won the individual honors of the race in 13:31.

CONDEMNS EVICTIONS OF BISBEE WORKERS

Commission's Recommendations for Action on Evidence Are Adopted by Wilson.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—Severe criticism of the persons responsible for the deportation of 1,186 striking copper workers from Bisbee, Ariz., and the Warren mining district last July is contained in a report of President Wilson's special labor commission made public tonight.

The commission found that the deportations were planned by Bisbee citizens, including officials of the Phelps-Dodge, and Calumet and Arizona mining interests, although no disorder or violence had been threatened.

The deportation interfered with operation of the draft law and the commission suggested the President refer the evidence to Attorney General Gregory. It was also found that the leaders in the enterprise used the local office of the Bell Telephone Company and attempted to exercise a censorship over parts of interstate telephone and telegraph lines. This matter should be referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission for acion, the commission suggested. Both recommendations have been followed by the President, it was announced tonight.

The deportations and the usurpation of judicial functions by a self-delegated body of citizens for more than a month afterward, said the commission, "have even been made the basis of an attempt to affect adversely public opinion among some of the people of the Allies." The reference is believed to be to criticism of American anti-labor methods by Russian workmen.

ZANDONAI'S TRAGIC OPERA IS REVIVED

Riccardo Zandonai's opera, "Francesca da Rimini," one of the new productions at the Metropolitan Opera House last season, was given there yesterday afternoon for the first time this season. It had four representations after its first performance, but it is not easy to see just why this opera has been picked for repetition. It is true that few of the new productions of opera in recent seasons have survived long. Not many have deserved to. It did not seem as if "Francesca da Rimini" was among those that did. It has a libretto of great beauty.

It is based on d'Annunzio's play (presented here in its original form by Eleanore Duse), itself based on the story of Baccaccio, which in turn goes back to one of the most famous passages of Dante's "Inferno."

The engaging first act; the third act, where the lovers "read of Lancelot, how love constrained him," and having kissed, read no more that day, and the final scene of the last act, the swift and tragic culmination, are the best portions of the work, the ones that offer most valuable material to the musician. The stage battle of the second act is ineffective, as all operatic battles are. The first scene of the last act, where the malignant younger brother, Malatestino, implants suspicion in Giovanni's mind, is unduly long; the gruesome episode of the severed head is needless, for it leads nowhere; and there is sluggishness in the development of the next disclosed meeting of Paolo and Francesca. But there is in the book much gracious material for the composer, opportunities for music of the greatest distinction, concentration and expressive power.

But Zandonai has not risen to those opportunities. He is most successful in the first act, which has much of the color, the suggestion of the time and place—a fortunate introduction to the opera whose promise is unfortunately not carried out. In much of the opera the listener longs for a more vital and significant music; for a richer invention, a more cogent expression. The scene of the reading from the book is one of the finest opportunities that has been provided for a modern composer. And while Zandonai has not fallen into operatic conventionalities in his musical expression of it, he has lamentably failed to rise to the eloquence of the situation and all its implications. And in the tragic scenes of the last act, he can contribute only violence, not poignancy, in his music. Zandonai has spent himself on subtleties of orchestral color, instrumental figurations, harmonies often of a recondite kind. In his treatment of the orchestra he has done much that is masterly and that shows a fine feeling for the medium. But there is here no sufficient substitute for the failure of his musical invention properly to deal with a libretto that offers such possibilities to the musician.

The chief people in the performance were those who took part in last season's performance. Mme. Alda showed grace, charm, and truly sympathetic quality in her impersonation of Francesca; unfortunately not always in her voice. Mr. Martinelli has improved his characterization of Paola; it has more chivalry, more passion and tenderness, and he sang with fervor. There is a characteristic part for Mr. Amato in Giovanni, of which he makes much. The maidens attendant upon Francesca are acceptably represented both in action and in song. Mr. Moranzoni conducted; he had taken up the study of the opera evidently with enthusiasm and reflected it in his conducting.

OLD INSTRUMENTS HEARD.

The French Players Return and Give a Concert in Aeolian Hall.

One of the good fortunes of the musical season is the return to these shores of the Société des Instruments Anciens. These players of old instruments from Paris gave great delight last season, when they came, as they have come this season, under the auspices of the "French-American Association for Musical Art."

The organization consists of Maurice Hewitt, quinton; Henri Casadesus, viole d'amour; Louis Hasselmans, (who takes the place of Eugène Dubruille,) viole de gamb; Maurice Devilliers, bass viol, and Mme. Regina Patorni, harpsichord, to whom is added this season Mme. M. L. Henri Casadesus, harp lute, the harp lute being an invention of the late eighteenth century, intended to replace the guitar.

The enchanting tone of these instruments, its penetrating sweetness and expressiveness, is well remembered by those who heard the French players last season; as well as their uncommon skill and fine artistic feeling, their perfect ensemble, their mastery of the style of the old music that forms their repertory. Much of what they play is, doubtless, arranged; for music was not generally composed for just this combination of instruments. But the arrangements are most skilful, and the quality of the instruments is a perfect expression of the sentiment of the music.

Yesterday they played in Aeolian Hall a "sinfonia" of Hayden, and a curious piece by Lesueur, called "Une Fête à la Cour des Miracles," for the quartet with harpsichorp; a "Ballet de la Royne" by Monsigny, for quartet and harp lute; solos for harpsichord and a concerto by Asioli for viole d'Amour. The performance gave great pleasure to an audience of large numbers.

Army and Navy Benefit Tonight.

A benefit performance will be given by the National Emergency Relief Society of the Army and Navy at the Hippodrome this evening to establish lodging and club rooms and comforts in Manhattan for soldiers and sailors on leave.

A program of forty numbers has been arranged on which will appear leading artists from grand opera and the stage. Jack Norworth will be master of ceremonies. Young society girls will sell programs and prominent society women are among the patronesses.

Moses Boguslawsky Plays.

Moses Boguslawsky, a young pianist from the West, who played here some ten days ago, reappeared at Aeolian Hall last evening. He played Brahms's G minor Rhapsody, Beethoven's sonata in E minor, Op. 90; Schumann's "Papillons," a group of pieces by Chopin, and some others. Mr. Boguslawsky's talent is unquestionable. His playing has interesting qualities; it points toward a future development that promises well.

SERVICE FLAGS UNOFFICIAL.

Design Not Approved by President Wilson or Government.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—It was brought out today that neither President Wilson nor the Government has indorsed the conventional design of a war service flag that is being sold by many stores for display from dwellings, business houses, clubs and fraternity houses to show by the number of stars how many persons from that particular place are serving in the army, the navy, or the marine corps. Secretary Baker said that the War Department had not given its official approval to the design. When he was told that President Wilson was credited with having approved the design he said that such a report was incredible.

The question of whether the Government or the President had indorsed the conventional service flag was brought forward by the publication of a Washington dispatch in THE NEW YORK TIMES of Thursday, in which it was said that a patent design on a service flag had been granted by the United States Patent Office and that a firm in Brattleboro, Vt., had written to THE TIMES that it was informed by the manufacturers that the design was patented and a royalty of 10 per cent. would have to be paid on the sale of such flags. In its letter to THE TIMES the Brattleboro firm said:

"We are astonished to learn that this flag, adopted by the Government, recommended by the President, and sold mostly to mothers whose sons are in the service, should be the private monopoly of some individual."

The design was patented by R. L. Queisser, a business man of Cleveland, Ohio, who was an officer in the National Guard and served on the Mexican border. Secretary Baker said today that Mr. Queisser had shown him the design and he probably had expressed himself as liking it, but there had been no official indorsement by himself or the War Department.

Secretary Baker has given permission to the Chief Clerk of the War Department to have prepared a service flag showing by the stars it will bear the number of civilian employes of the War Department who have entered the military service, 365 all told. It is intended to display this flag from the main entrance to the department building. Inquiry this afternoon indicated that the design was similar to that patented by Mr. Queisser and the question is now raised whether the department will be liable to a claim for the payment of royalty or take the consequences of infringement of a design patented.

KREISLER WILDLY CHEERED.

Sailors and Soldiers at Violinist's Second Recital Here.

United States sailors in uniform filled two adjoining lower boxes at Carnegie Hall and soldiers in khaki were among a big overflow crowd on the stage when Fritz Kreisler gave his second violin recital of the New York season yesterday afternoon. Mr. Kreisler, assisted by Carl Lamson, played concertos of Vivaldi and Vieuxtemps, and many smaller pieces, including an old French gavotte transcribed by Friedberg, and arrangements of his own, such as "La Gitana," an encore that was itself again encored.

At the close he added his version of Paderewski's pianoforte "Minuet," his familiar "Indian Lament," and two waltzes, while the shouting audience filled pauses in these later Kreisleriana with a tumult of roaring acclamation rarely heard in a concert hall.

OFFICERS OF 306TH DANCE.

Four Hundred from Camp Upton in Aid for Regimental Fund.

Officers of the 306th Infantry gave their first regimental ball last night at the Hotel Biltmore for the benefit of the regimental fund. The affair was organized within a few days and the guests came by invitation. About 400 officers from Camp Upton, looking very fit and smart, attended, bringing their relatives and friends.

The committee in charge included Major S. F. Weaver, Captain Robert I. Aitken, and Lieutenant J. J. Riordan.

Colonel George Vidmer, Augustus Thomas, and Daniel Frohman spoke, and other events on the program included the presentation by Robert Haines and company of a playlet, "The One Way Out," Miss Helen G. Patterson in classical dances, Miss Idelle Patterson and Miss Aniparito Fararr in songs, and Professors James Murray and M. Costello in a sabre bout. A tableau showing Washington and Lafayette aroused much applause. Robert Cain directed the entertainment.

DECLARES OUR HELP WILL BE TOO LATE

Rhenish Westfalien Gazette Says the Entente Is Playing America as Its Last Card.

SEES ITS FOES STARVING

Germans Told That Their Enemies Are Also Hungry—Four Years for Us to Get Army Across.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Nov. 24.—The National Liberal Industrial Annexationist organ, the Rhenish Westfalien Gazette, points out that Lloyd George is playing his last trump, namely American help, and that his Paris speech was intended to bring pressure to bear on America to help the Entente immediately. The paper says that the question of America's part in the war has been taken up feverishly by the press and Entente statesmen, whose speeches are mainly concerned with America, and that one conference after another is taking place between the United States and the Entente.

"It is the last trump the Entente has to play, and woe if it fails," says the paper. "It would be wrong, however, to underestimate the worth of American aid to our European enemies."

The paper reminds its readers that at one time the English Army was much underrated, but that England proved the most dangerous of all Germany's enemies. The paper holds that it is, however, unnecessary to be bluffed, and it is natural that the enemy should endeavor to exaggerate the importance of American help, sometimes to dampen German enthusiasm and sometimes to encourage the Entente. It adds that it is not without intention that the Reuter and Havas agencies and The Associated Press have been rushing out reports of what America is doing and what Wilson has been planning in the last few months, but especially in the last few days, but argues that if America arrests 200 Germans and interns them, or prohibits enemy subjects from working on ships, or creates zones, it is no sacrifice for America, but for the purpose of deceiving the people with the idea that America is strenuously preparing for war against Germany.

The paper pretends that the Entente nations are putting all their stakes on America, that all recent speeches have shown this, and that Lloyd George wants American help at once, as England cannot wait. The paper, however, holds that the German press has not laid enough stress on the fact that the Entente will soon be on the verge of starvation with her food restrictions, and that it will be worse than in Germany.

[THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent learns that this idea is already very prevalent in Germany, and is used as a means to console the civilians for the privations they have suffered.]

The paper points out that Germany naturally does not approve a starvation war, but holds that England may have the tables turned on her, and further argues that, in view of all these facts, it is a mistake to underestimate America's interference, but it should be met calmly. "The U-boats continue working day and night," it adds, "and will render transport to the Continent difficult, especially since the establishment of a new danger zone which especially hits at America's new base in the Azores."

The paper says that Germany now has a free arm, owing to the collapse of Italy and Russia, and that when Americans join the English and French Germany can send masses of troops to the western front.

"We have every reason to assume that the menacing words, 'Too Late,' will be the title of America's help when it is recorded in history," says the Gazette.

The Weser Zeitung, commenting on the report in The Army and Navy Journal that only German ships will be used for American transport, points out that several errors are to be found in the report, and that the capacity of the ships is greatly exaggerated. The paper holds that, counting the tonnage of sixteen ships, it would only be possible to ship 2,865 officers and 55,400 men, even if all the ships were in condition for transport this year and could make nine crossings during the year. The paper asserts that at this rate the transport of an army of 2,000,000 would take four years, and holds that the German U-boats will have something to say in the matter. This last is only one of many similar reports which are intended to minimize the American peril.

BECKER TRIUMPHS AT GOLF.

Defeats Phillips in Autumn Tourney Final at Pinehurst.

Special to The New York Times.

PINEHURST, N. C., Nov. 24.—The finals of the Autumn tournament at Pinehurst were played today in all divisions over the No. 2 course. C. L. Becker, Ekwanok, won the President's trophy by defeating H. G. Phillips, Moore County Country Club. Phillips won the first two holes and then made his opponent a present of the third by knocking Becker's ball into the cup instead of playing around the stymie for a half. At the next hole Becker squared the match, and after winning the eighth maintained his advantage to the end, winning by 1 up.

The second division match between C. F. Lancaster of Boston and G. T. Dunlap of Summit called for two extra holes. Lancaster was 3 down at the turn, but gradually overhauled Dunlap on the inward journey and squared the match at the home green by sinking a 40-foot putt for a par 4. Lancaster finally won at the twentieth hole.

The summary:

First Sixteen.—C. L. Becker, Ekwanok, beat H. G. Phillips, Moore County C. C., 1 up. Beaten eight—R. C. Shannon, 2d, Brockport, beat T. A. Kelley, Southern Pines, 1 up.

Second Sixteen.—C. F. Lancaster, Woodland, beat G. T. Dunlap, Canoe Brook, 1 up, (20 holes.) Beaten eight—J. G. Nicholson, New Bedford, beat H. H. Stambaugh, Youngstown, 1 up.

Third Sixteen.—W. J. Hitchcock, Youngstown, beat Colonel H. W. Ormsbee, South Shore, 5 and 4.

HYDE IS SQUASH VICTOR.

Defeats Vanderpoel in Spirited Match by 15-8, 15-6.

Fillmore van S. Hyde of the Harvard Club and J. Onatavia, also of the Harvard Club, advanced to the third round of the Fall squash tennis tournament at the Squash Club yesterday. Hyde defeated W. H. Vanderpoel of the Squash Club in a brilliantly contested match at 15—8, 15—6. Onatavia's advance was at the expense of N. T. Torrance of the Crescent Athletic Club, who was defeated at 15—10, 15—10.

The match between Hyde and Vanderpoel was more closely contested than the score indicates. Hyde is an adept racquet wielder, one of the best in the Metropolitan district, and it was the strategy of his play which baffled the endeavors of Vanderpoel. The latter hit the harder, but Hyde hit the more accurately, and his placements were of prime importance in establishing the victory. He seemed to have the faculty of solving Vanderpoel's sharp driving game, and his remarkable ability to make difficult gets stood him in well.

Torrance played a careful game that was at no time severe. This did not prove adequate to holding Onatavia at bay. The tournament will be continued tomorrow, when the round before the semi-final will be contested.

GARY PAID $300,000 FOR FIVE FRAGONARDS

U. S. Steel Chairman Says That Pastoral Paintings Were "a Pre-War Investment."

Judge Elbert H. Gary, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the United States Steel Corporation, paid $300,000 last Winter for five paintings of pastoral scenes by Honore Fragonard, the French artist of the decorative school, it was announced yesterday. In admitting the purchase last night Judge Gary laughingly characterized it as a "pre-war investment."

The five paintings were part of the Kraemer collection, which was exhibited several years ago in the Georges Petit Gallery in Paris. Judge Gary bought them through Gimpel & Wildenstein, art dealers of this city and Paris. Four of the paintings bear the titles "La Bergere," (the Shepherdess;) "La Vendangeuse," (The Gleaner;) "Le Labourer," (The Workman,) and "Le Jardinier," (The Gardener.) Several paintings by the same artist are in the Morgan and Frick collections.

Eat and Grow Glad

The GIMBEL Restaurant has ideals, to say nothing of traditions. We will never shade our quality, come what may.

The American loves a good table. We are a nation of epicures.

With food prices soaring to outrageous heights in some quarters, the tendency to economize has become insistent.

But America holds fast to quality, cutting down rather on quantity, if cut down we must, even while Europe goes by contraries.

Here you can always be sure of highest quality foods,—purity, cleanliness, protection—and these are days when we maintain standards most rigidly.

While prices are agreeably fair and low, thanks to powerful GIMBEL buying influences in New York and our great grocery store in Philadelphia.

In a state of siege, it seems to us, that invaders, who always seek the best, would want to come and dine at GIMBELS.

OUTSIDE THE PALE.

No grass grows under the feet of the Bolsheviki as they continue their mad rush to ruin for themselves and for Russia. They order the Commander in Chief of the Russian armies to negotiate an armistice with the enemy and remove him when he refuses. They begin a disbandment of the army itself, releasing "all citizen soldiers" of the class of 1899 and giving notice that orders releasing other classes will be issued later. In the name of TROTZKY, "Commissioner" of Foreign Affairs, they advise other Governments that they have "offered" an armistice and a democratic peace on all fronts, on the basis of no annexations and no indemnities. Their "Government" having no funds, they make requisition upon the wealthier classes for blankets and clothing for the soldiers. They forbid the publication of bourgeois newspapers by decreeing that newspaper advertisements are property of the State and shall be published only in soldiers' and workmen's newspapers, although in this country, at the present moment, Socialists are invoking the constitutional guarantee of freedom of speech and liberty of press against officers of the Government who proceed against seditious newspapers, not because they are socialistic but because they are disloyal.

As a crowning achievement in this Socialist progress to a higher and better state of things, "Commissioner" TROTZKY is making public secret treaties between Russia and some of her allies, also confidential correspondence and telegrams, at the same time warning the Teutonic Powers that they must not be overexultant at these disclosures since their own chancelleries may sometime be searched by the proletariat in Berlin and Vienna. TROTZKY is, of course, wholly incapable of understanding that this is an act of dishonor, that it does infinite harm to Russia as a nation. Governments may change, but the honor of a nation, its good faith, should be zealously safeguarded by whatever party or class happens to be in power; at least that is a principle that has found universal acceptance among nations zealous of their reputation. TROTZKY would with vigor and pride assert the opposite principle, since as a Socialist it is one of his aims to destroy nationalism and to set up the flag of internationalism. Withdrawing from the war with Germany, the Bolsheviki have, with the forces they happen to command, plunged into a war with the middle class, against "capital"; and as he and his associates insist that Great Britain, France, the United States and Italy are making war upon Germany at the prompting of "capital," in the interests of "capital," it is from his point of view perfectly logical that he should disclose all past secret transactions between these capitalistic Governments and Russia.

The Bolsheviki have put Russia outside the pale of civilized, recognizable Governments. Their own embassy at Washington repudiates them, the allied Governments refuse to have any dealings with them. Unfortunately, the evil consequences of their behavior are not limited to their own persons. They will go down in infamy, as throughout history ignorance has gone down when through some mischance it has seized power. The graver results of their recklessness will be felt by Russia itself. In future years, it may be for a very long time, other Governments will have a profound distrust of the pledges, commitments and good faith of a nation so infirm in purpose and spirit that even for a brief moment men of the sort of LENINE and TROTZKY can come into power. The memory and burden of their misdoing will weigh heavily upon the Russian people themselves. Had a stable government been set up as a result of the revolution, Russia would have had a great commercial future. She needs foreign capital in immense volumes, and she could have had it for the development of her resources. But a nation that gleefully publishes secret despatches and confidential notes, for any cause arising from the war spondence would not stop at a little thing like repudiating debts, public or private, or confiscating all property of nationals and foreigners alike. The Bolsheviki, by their madness, and the Russian people in weakly permitting them to seize upon authority, have given Russia a bad name among nations which it will live down only through many decades of stability and civil order.

It is socialism that has brought Russia to ruin, German socialism. Apart from the issues of the war, the community of civilized nations have a righteous grievance against the Teutonic Powers and against Russia. In those nations the genius of the people has failed to establish and maintain forms of government compatible either with the usages or with the safety of the society of nations. They have been breeding places of socialism, anarchism, nihilism and communism, and those foul contagions have spread to other nations, free and well-governed nations, where they have become a pest and a menace. In England, in France and in the United States there is no reason or excuse for the agitations of the Socialists, they have fill-served the interests of the very classes they profess to represent. In these democracies, old-time evils and inequalities of which a century ago, or more recently, just complaint was made, are curable and being cured through the ceaselessly active force of public opinion. But in Russia, in Austria, in Germany that force was suppressed in all its saving activities, with the result that the propaganda of class-war, of war of the poor against the middle class, has done its secret work. It is a destructive work, senseless in its methods, since its aims, which are not all senseless, might have been successfully attained for the common good, by other means.

We cannot put all the blame upon the autocrats, upon the Czars, the Emperors and the war lords. Ultimately, the people themselves, the people of Germany, Austria, and Russia, are responsible, for long ago they could have had it otherwise had they willed the great change. The Russians are too ignorant, for illiteracy is their bane, the Germans and the Austrians have too blindly followed the teaching of generations of officers and agents of the Government, professors and publicists and historians, equally agents of the autocracy, who have drilled it into them that obedience to the State and supine reverence for the over-lord were supreme duties. Germans, Austrians, and Russians are now crushed by the evils they themselves have incited through their lack of the spirit and the courage to assert and maintain their rights as free men. But they have done infinite harm to other nations, too, for the war itself is one of the proofs of their incapacity.

The Russian revolution is going the headlong course of the French revolution. It was not necessary, it was stupid. Those who in other days pointed to the training in the work of administration which the Russians had received in the Mir and the Zemstvo as evidence of fitness to govern themselves, must now see that the transition from Czardom to a republic was much too sudden for such a people. MILYUKOFF was probably right, and there is no wiser man in Russia. Rejecting the corrupt substance, but preserving something of the form of the old Government, the revolution might have established a central authority that would have had the respect and obedience of the people, that would have preserved order at home and kept faith with friendly nations. A constitutional monarchy quite as democratic as the United States or as England might have been established that would have bridged over the dangerous time following upon the abolition of autocracy and have given Russia its place among the free nations. In the existing and well-understood conditions, the republic immediately following the revolution, was practically certain to be a socialistic republic. That is what the reckless, ignorant, irresponsible men in Petrograd have aimed to establish, and the result practically is anarchy. There is in Russia no government capable of keeping order at home or holding the respect and confidence of other nations. In the slow process of time men of intelligence, of sanity and of sufficient strength to put out and put down the wild, irresponsible Socialists who have usurped power, may come to the direction of affairs in Russia, but they will have much to undo before the new State can take the place it might have held had the Provisional Government used the strong hand in the beginning.

A GUARANTEE OF WAR RELIEF PROJECTS.

The multiplication of societies for various purposes of war relief requires, and the case of the Army and Navy Bazaar, so unhappy otherwise, is strongly useful in bringing public attention to the imperative need of it, a central licensing body, authoritative and final, to examine, to certify and approve or to reject each war work organization, temporary or more permanent. The multitude of these, the multitude of the demands upon the generosity of the community, are bewildering. The instances of incompetence or fraud, if rare, can only have a chilling effect upon the now eager desire to give.

No charitable society or enterprise should be allowed to go on or begin until it has been investigated or passed upon by a competent tribunal. There should be an official list of the worthy and approved.

The most competent, the unimpeachable body for the purpose of investigation and registry or rejection is the Red Cross Society.

THE INTERRUPTED VACATION.

Envy loves to snap at the heels of Virtue. Mr. CHARLES F. MURPHY, High Keeper of the Temple of Reform in East Fourteenth Street, comes back from his villeggiatura in Indiana, where, it is understood, he has been composing the first volume of his eagerly awaited "Memoirs of a Municipal Reformer." He returns a week earlier than he was looked for. Straightway all the brazen tongues of Rumor swing and ring. Judge HYLAN has been proclaiming, generously if superfluously, that he is unbossed, unbossable, no man's man. He owns "no responsibility except to the people and his own conscience." In short, his favorite quotation is Dr. SMOLLETT'S:

> Thy spirit, independence, let me share,
> Lord of the lion heart, the eagle eye!

Nobody's "indorsement" counts with him. No brokers need apply. He will make his own appointments. Mr. MURPHY is imagined as wondering, and to be scared at the thought, whether Judge HYLAN is going to be refractory.

These surmises do no honor to the infidels and the cynics who make them. Mr. MURPHY'S welcome reappearance in a city which he is so interested in has a simple, natural explanation that discredits those who love to look upon the darker side of human nature and are blind to its most radiant lovelinesses. Judge HYLAN has written to Mr. FRANK L. DOWLING, President of the Board of Aldermen, a letter asking > that the Board of Aldermen exercise its authority under the charter and reduce what in their judgment would be inordinate salary increases and strike from the budget the places not necessary to the conduct of the city's business.

Mr. MURPHY leaves the soft delights of French Lick Springs, and his literary labors, to fly to the aid of municipal economy, of the abolition of unnecessary offices, causes to which his public life and severest thought have long been given. Doubtless he will appear in person at the City Hall tomorrow. He is not merely "for the Uplift." He is for the Cutdown.

TRAFFIC RESTRICTIONS.

It is announced that the railways are asking for the exclusion from their traffic of nonessential business in order to relieve demands for needed service beyond their capacity. That will shock many shippers who have assumed even to the present time that the railway question was a matter of rates. They would rather pay any rates than be excluded from the rails. Their ideal was a constant excess supply of accommodations, provided at no matter what waste of capital, and at constantly lower rates enforced by laws designed and administered with a view to the reduction of railway profits. They have succeeded all too well, and are daily less pleased with the result. They still may care nothing about the railways' troubles, but the railway question looks differently now. Its present aspect is much like that in the old days of uneconomic rate competition, when the road which carried most freight lost most money. The railways are asking to have business diverted from them to other roads less congested. The Pennsylvania is willing to dispense with much passenger service so that it can carry more freight. The Norfolk & Western wishes to carry only coal. Eleven leading commodities are to be restricted on all lines. Other ports than New York are to be utilized and much business is to be sent southward.

These drastic proposals show that the railways are impressed by the crisis and want to meet it in the manner best fitted to produce quickest results. Their knowledge how to do it is incomparably superior to that of any other body of men. Their readiness to serve the Government rather than the interests of their customers or themselves is attested by acts of indisputable sincerity. Their readiness to adopt any measures other than their own is shown by their request for suggestions from any source. None comes from the Interstate Commission. It is too busy with rate arguments to consider administration of traffic. Those who have been foremost friends of regulation of the sort we have had no longer rely upon it. They are proposing now Government ownership. They need it as a refuge or life preserver. They would be bankrupt, indeed, if they did not have some project to amend their own plans now that they have proved to be bad.

The politicians and the reformers by statute need Government ownership more than the railways. Railway men ask what Government would do other than they are doing, and profess their desire to do whatever Government may ask better than Government could, if only Government will put a name to it. It passes patient tolerance that Government ownership or operation should be proposed for American railways when British railways borrowed their chief administrator from this side the ocean, and when French Government railways are on the point of being put under control of Americans for war purposes. No foreign railway man thinks that he can teach American railway men. That is left for those who have brought railway affairs to their present condition.

The manner in which profits are reduced by too much business appears from the official figures published yesterday. In September the gross earnings were greater than in either 1915 or 1916. But the operating income, the remnant after expenses and taxes, was nineteen millions less than 1916 and over eight millions less than 1915. That is the explanation of the railways' wish to be helped by the restriction of traffic. It was announced yesterday that the shortage of cars had increased 25,104 over last year. And everywhere there is complaint of shortage of everything carried in cars. The railways might be blamed if their advice had been acted upon, and if their humble requests had been heeded. But the railways cannot be blamed for their condition. It is in the care of those who assumed to teach the railways how to run their business, and who now are asked by the railways what they shall do to help their customers and themselves. The silence is oppressive.

INTERBOROUGH POSTAGE.

It is announced that the Post Office has amended its regulations so that full postage shall be collected on "drop" letters taken in bulk for delivery locally. The additional postage is as much war tax as postage, according to the tax levy, which, it seems, is now to be collected by postal regulation amendment. In that case perhaps the regulations may also be amended to remove from the tax what, it is to be supposed, should never have been included within it. The new postal rates were proposed by Congress according to geographical boundaries, but they are collected by the Post Office according to its own boundaries, of which the public knows nothing.

For example, in Queens County there are six Post Offices, although Queens County is part of New York City. In this city there are five boroughs, and letters between them are due to pay full rates, according to the amended regulations. In public estimation all letters within this city should be drop letters, although the regulations establish rates which seem as absurd as the collection of full rates between, say, Yorkville and Harlem. Such designations have as little to recommend them as addresses to Post Offices whose boundaries are unknown to any geography or local law.

This is a more important matter than it seems. The case is published of one company which has 40,000 customers on its books, and whose bills, when collected by mail, cost the company $19,200 in revenue to the Government. Under the new rates the company does this business for itself, at a cost of $4,680. The cost per letter was less one one-half cent, and the Post Office loses $19,200. This may show what profit the Government makes at the 2-cent rate, and throws a light upon the justice of collecting 3 cents upon an artificial definition of drop letters.

Beyond this there is a suggestion of what real profits there might be in the Post Office business, if managed with the efficiency of private business. Nothing is known of the costs of the mail business of the Government, and therefore a certain incredulity attaches to the department's occasional claims of profits, meaning merely the excess of collections over disbursements. The Post Office is a popular institution, and might make itself more so, but not in the methods which it uses.

PRUSSIAN PARLIAMENTARY REFORM.

Formerly German foreign policy was used to distract attention from internal affairs. This year internal reform is promised for the purpose of inspiriting the people. BETHMANN HOLLWEG proposed, vaguely, a larger popular co-operation in internal affairs to support the "strong foreign policy" which he foresaw as necessary after the war. The proposed reform of the Prussian suffrage and changes in the composition of the Prussian Upper House, accepted by the Kaiser last week, are long-delayed measures of justice, an abrogation, in mere words as yet, of the feudal privileges by which Junkerthum controls Prussia and, to a large extent, the Empire.

The Prussian House of Lords consists of Princes of the royal family and of two formerly sovereign families who are of age; of the heads of sixteen mediatized princely houses; of some fifty heads of the territorial nobility; of life peers selected by the King from rich manufacturers, landholders, and famous men; of eight noblemen elected in eight of the oldest Prussian provinces by the resident landowners; of representatives of the universities, heads of chapters, Burgomasters of towns with more than 50,000 inhabitants, and of members named by the King for life or a shorter term.

The Prussian franchise is an intolerable inequality, against which the Social Democrats have long fought hopelessly. The Abgeordnetenhaus, or Chamber of Deputies, is chosen on the "three class" system. Election is indirect, voting open. The voting power of each primary elector depends on the amount of taxes he pays. In each constituency the State tax paid is divided into three parts, and the voters, all males of 25 or over, into three classes. The big taxpayers, paying one-third of the whole constituency tax, are the first class; the next biggest the second, the smallest and the poor are the third. Each division elects secondary or intermediate electors, one for every 250 inhabitants, and these elect the members of the so-called House of Representatives.

The rich are enormously overrepresented, the small taxpayers scandalously underrepresented by what BISMARCK frankly called "the wretchedest of systems." On an average the first class of primary voters is from 3 to 5 per cent. of the whole number, the second 10 to 12, the third about 85 per cent. In the cities the disproportion is even more glaring. As a rule the first and second class vote the same ticket, the third class is practically condemned to a minority of one to two. In some electoral districts the first class consists of one man. In some elections 200,000 first-class voters have elected one-third of the secondary electors, 900,000 second-class voters another third, more than 6,000,000 third-class voters the other third.

Thus both houses of the Prussian Diet are controlled by the rich and landholding classes. Roughly speaking, two-thirds of the House of Lords and half the Lower House come from the rural districts, have been "solid for" agrarian interests. The State has grown industrial. The Diet remains agrarian; and since there has been no revision of electoral districts, though a few seats have been added, for fifty years, the representation of cities and parties is grotesquely disproportionate to numbers. Not till nine years ago did the Social Democrats succeed in breaking into the Prussian Lower House.

ART NOTES.

An Exhibition of Chinese Painting and Sculpture.

At the Montross Gallery is an exhibition of Chinese painting and sculpture arranged by Professor Bahr. Many of the paintings and other objects have the usual interest of work done in accordance with the Chinese ideal, life in line. There are superb potteries and jades, and tomb figurines skilfully modeled and instinct with vitality, but the finest sculptures are two heads in basalt, one of the Goddess Kwannon, the other of a Guardian of the Temple, both from the T'ang period, when art had a freshness and vigor and a nobility of expression not afterward rivaled. The Kwannon is mysterious and withdrawn, a cryptic goddess aware of strange secrets and meditating upon experiences of the soul. The simplicity of the beautiful contour and the compact massive forms, together with the subtlety of modeling in the long, sensitive features and the look of spiritual life that stirs their deep repose, make an impression upon the least emotional observer. This head recently has become the property of Dr. Siren, whose studies in early Italian art lead naturally to this earlier and greater art. The Temple Guardian is in striking contrast to the Kwannon; a rugged, thick-nosed type, chosen for his office, no doubt, on account of his physical power, but possessed also of ample power of will, as his firm chin, doubled with flesh, and his outthrust under lips disclose, and having withal a sense of humor that finds expression in the satiric glance of his slanting eyes and the almost hidden smile.

One of the greatest of the paintings is a little leaflet in the outer gallery showing a blind beggar groping horribly at a wall with upstretched hands. There are passion and life in the drawing, and there is with this psychological drama a striking decorative plan that makes use of the line of muscle and joint somewhat as the early Romans did to emphasize a linear pattern within the quivering contour of the body. The exhibition lasts through the coming week. An unfortunate compromise has been made in framing the larger paintings. They stiffen under it, and lose something of their special character.

Maori Types.

At the Museum of Natural History Miss Del Mar is showing her preliminary studies for mural decorations and for a panoramic background of Maori life to be placed in the South Sea Island Hall of the museum. The studies include many portraits, drawings of surf riders, spear throwers, poi-makers, picturesque fruits, such as the mango, hanging in clusters against a wall, tropical fish, hunters, oarsmen, everything necessary to bring vividly forward the characteristic surroundings and activities of the people. The exhibition lasts until Dec. 10.

A LOYAL SCHOOL.

Teachers and Students Not to Blame for Meetings at Washington Irving.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the editorial columns of last Sunday's TIMES, appearing in an article upon the loyalty of teachers, are the following sentences: "The Teachers' Union, at a meeting held in the Washington Irving High School, another centre of wild-tongued socialism, voted to give the accused teachers its 'legal, moral, and financial support.' So it is the union of the teachers, of some teachers, that is, against the American Union."

I feel sure that in speaking of the Washington Irving High School as a "centre of wild-tongued socialism" you did not intend to criticise either its teachers or its students, but that you intended to censure the activities of some organizations that have been permitted by the Board of Education to use the school building when the school has not been in session. The distinction, however, is not clear to the minds of the reading public, and, consequently, your editorial, read as it is throughout the entire country where the Washington Irving High School is so generally known, has reflected upon the character of the teachings of a large and patriotic body of teachers.

It should be made known that responsibility for the use of school buildings by outside organizations is lodged exclusively with the Board of Education, which thus has absolute power to decline the use of such buildings for meetings not in positive support of the ideals of American citizenship.

Courts-Martial for Enemies Here.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Not until all cases of espionage and attempts to wreck the Government's prosecution of the war are tried before military or naval courts-martial will the Germans, pro-Germans, and pacifists in our midst realize that the American people mean business.

POLISH AMBITIONS.

A Yearning for Western Culture, but Not German Kultur.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In THE TIMES of Nov. 22 is published a cable from Berlin which stated that the Polish Council in Warsaw, selected under German auspices, in a letter sent to the German Emperor, declared its intention to pursue its political and economic aims in common with the Central Powers, as based on a common Western culture, and you characterised that letter as a "yearning" of the Polish Council for German Kultur.

The Polish nation, from the dawn of its history to the present day, has been, by its religion, by its habits of life, institutions, and political aims, a nation of Western culture, adding to the growth of that culture and sharing its fruits; it always leaned toward Rome, and not toward Byzantium. In that sense it yearned for a Western culture. But now, when an internal strife is raging between the Western culture and a German Kultur; when Sorbonne, Oxford and Cambridge, Bologna and Padua, are impugning Berlin, when Francis of Assisi and Giordano Bruno, Descartes, Pascal, Locke, Hume, and Rousseau are set against State pastors, State philosophers, and State professors of aggressive militarism; when the Night and Day of Michelangelo confront the Siegesallee, and the sweet Madonna faces the infuriated Valkyrs, there can be no question as to what kind of culture a Polish Council would choose. Moreover, the Poles know the Prusso-German Kultur by its fruits, the bitter taste of which is still very fresh in their memory; the forcible expatriation of Poles, who were occupying and cultivating a land on which from time immemorial their forefathers lived, the flogging of Polish children by Prussian schoolmasters for their refusal to say their prayers in German. The Poles know well the political credo of the Prussian State toward the Polish nation—a credo of Ausrotten—to destroy them root and branch. What "Polish" Council could desire such a Kultur?

An unhampered Polish Council—the expression of a free Polish nation—can only yearn for day and light, and not for night and blackness.

Could Prisoners Be Sent Here?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am unable to see why it would not be advantageous to bring back to America in the empty, or practically empty, ships returning from voyages to France and England with munitions, provisions, and men, a million and a half or two million German and Austrian prisoners, and put them to work here on farms in groups of about thirty under guard, thus producing twice the supply of farm products or releasing that number of farmers for the draft. This would, it appears to me, relieve the United States of the necessity of sending food to France and England for these German and Austrian prisoners. Would it not also insure the ships from German submarines on their return?

I believe this does not conflict with any international law, and, if so, would it not be the time to abandon some slight technicality in opposing such an enemy as the Germans, who are alleged to have violated all the international laws that have come in conflict with their aims?

As an unlikely further idea which I have no belief will ever occur, if the western front should be broken, America would then have that million and a half or two million German and Austrian prisoners to hold as hostages of war to enforce the return and fair treatment of any of our own prisoners that Germany or Austria may have without possibly being compelled to pay millions for indemnity. Knitted Garments Needed and Prized.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Having been considerably disturbed in my mind of late by the persistent rumors that knitted garments were not wanted by either soldiers or sailors, one person telling me that the latter said they "made fine brass polishers," and, more authoritative, the damper thrown on our ardor by Secretaries Daniels and Baker, I made it my business to find out if the few minutes which I can devote in my busy day to the work were being spent for naught. So I inquired of a young sailor laddie stationed on a cruiser near by, and I wish every knitter could have heard his emphatic "Don't you believe any such thing! I never was so thankful for any present I ever received as I am for the set of knitted things sent me lately. I tell you they feel good some of these cold nights! Yes, I have the full set; some one borrowed my first helmet and forgot to return it, but I have another." He told me there was a constant demand for them, and that all the garments were highly prized by those fortunate enough to get them. The helmets and wristlets are specially useful and are easy to make, while socks will help keep off "trench feet," at least for a time.

But let every knitter see to it that what she knits is really usable, and that not one article is turned down because too small or ill-shaped. Of this there is much complaint. Let not an ounce of wool be wasted, for it is getting scarcer every day.

THE DEDICATED.

The Fathers.

We, the forehanded, far-seeing, and thrifty,
Fathers we, working with sinew and brain,
We who have fashioned our hundreds from fifty,
Toiled till in thousands we counted our gain—
We turn from our measure
Of tribute and treasure,
And on the high heads of the sons who are ours
We lay our tense hands with the prayer that all powers
We e'er craved or possessed
In their proud hearts may rest,
When duty shall call them to face the last test.

The Mothers.

We, the intense, sacrificial, devoted,
Mothers we, working with faith, hope, and heart,
We who have planned and have feared and have doted,
Triumphed 'fore all men and trembled apart—
We turn from our measure
Of quiet hours' leisure,
And on the bowed heads of the sons we have borne
Lay hands that are firm, though our hearts be forlorn,
As we pray that God's grace,
And the pride of our race,
May temper their souls when the last test they face!

The Sons.

We, the impetuous, hasty, and daring,
Sons, we, of parents grown worn for our sakes;
Each one, full eager to taste of life's faring,
Now answers the bugle and pulls up his stakes.
We turn from our measure
Of youth's light and pleasure,
To see in the eyes of the parents who bore us
Earth's pride in our manhood, and hear the far chorus
Of those yet unborn
In that new freedom's morn
That leapt from our swords o'er a world battle-torn!

HERMAN MONTAGU DONNER.

THE LAWFUL SUCCESSION IN RUSSIA.

The Supreme Power Is Held to Be the Temporary Committee of the Duma with Rodzianko at Its Head.

By NICHOLAS GOLDENWEISER,
Member of the Russian Bar.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the present condition of utter confusion within Russia a cardinal fact seems to have entirely dropped out of the attention, not only of the allied Governments, but also of the Russian representatives abroad. With the disappearance of Kerensky's Government, and since Lenine's Government does not even deserve the name of Goverament and is not recognised either within Russia or abroad, at first glance it appears that there is no legal body left in Russia which is, at the present time, vested with the supreme power of the State. No monarch, no Government, the State machine running by itself, consequently no means of representing the Russian State abroad—no authority to be dealt with by legally organized foreign nations.

But this impression is based upon forgetfulness and misunderstanding.

In reality there has never ceased to exist the most direct and the most impeccably legal succession of the former supreme power of the State, established by a millennium of historical development, and confirmed by an unmistakable expression of the will of the nation in 1613.

Until Oct. 17, 1905, the supreme power of the Russian State was vested in the person of the monarch. Since that date, when the Emperor, by a manifesto, limited his own rights and transferred a part of them to the legislative bodies, the supreme power was divided between the monarch, the State Council, and the State Duma.

On March 15, 1917, the monarch turned over his share of the supreme power to his brother, Michael, and a few days later Grand Duke Michael transferred it to the Temporary Committee of the State Duma. Meantime the State Duma itself had elected this same Temporary Committee, placing M. V. Rodzianko, the President of the Duma, at the head of the committee, and transferred to it the Duma's share of the supreme power.

By tacit acquiescence the State Council joined the Duma in its decision, and thus, in its turn, transferred its part of the supreme power to the Temporary Committee.

Later the committee appointed a Government with Prince Lvoff as President. This Government acted in the name of the committee. After this, the personnel of the Government was changed and the Presidency was transferred to Mr. Kerensky, with the consent of the Temporary Committee, but the supreme power of the State never legally ceased to exist in the Temporary Committee.

At last the Government appointed by the Temporary Committee after the abdication of the monarch was violently overthrown by a group of plotters, and disorder ensued, followed by a temporary loss of control over State affairs by the institution which is the sole legal successor of the supreme power of State of the former imperial Government, i. e., by the Temporary Committe of the State Duma, with M. V. Rodzianko at its head.

This fact, although it appears to be of a purely formal and theoretical character, is nevertheless of a tremendous significance.

If law is not to be waived, as a meaningless, annoying fiction, and if it is to be continued as the fundamental basis of all human relations, national as well as international, then the only right course to be taken by the established authorities of other nations and by the representatives of Russia, duly accredited by the foreign Governments, is to address, without delay, the institution which legally represents the Russian State, not only in its present transitory form, but in all its thousand-year-old tradition of a legally established State organism.

The practical result of now addressing the Temporary Committee would very probably indicate to the Russian nation the legal, reasonable and practical course to be pursued.

It might lead to the reassumption by the Temporary Committee of the legal authority which it omits to exercise at present, and to the appointment by it of a new, stable and efficient Government, which will guide the country on the safe path of law and order to the coming constituent assembly.

ANOTHER SUFFRAGE TEST.

Suggested That Now Men and Women Vote on It.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

At the recent election the amendment granting the suffrage to women was adopted by a majority of over 80,000 votes. At the election in 1915 a similar amendment was defeated by about 190,000 votes. It will be recalled that, after that defeat, the advocates of woman suffrage refused to accept the outcome as final, but immediately organized the even more determined campaign to secure the adoption of the amendment at the earliest possible date, which has just resulted in success.

It has been claimed by persons opposed to woman suffrage that a large majority of the women of the State are opposed thereto. Whether this claim is correct it is impossible to say, as the women of the State have never had an opportunity to vote upon the subject. If the opponents of woman suffrage are as earnest in their opposition to the amendment as its advocates have been in its support, it would seem that they will not accept the present decision as final. If they possess as much enthusiasm, energy, organising ability, and determination as its advocates, it would seem that they will now organise an equally determined campaign for the passing of an amendment repealing the present amendment and restoring the former condition. If such an amendment should be agreed to by the legislatures of 1918 and 1919, it would come before the people for approval at the election in November, 1919. At that election, the women of the State will have an equal right with the men to vote; and if the claim is really true that a large majority of the women are opposed to suffrage and if they care enough about the matter to express their preference at the polls, it would seem that they would have little difficulty in overcoming the majority of about 80,000 votes in its favor at the recent election. This course would offer the first opportunity which has been given, so far as I know, for women themselves to vote upon the question.

It would seem that the most zealous advocates of woman suffrage could not oppose the submission of such an amendment by the Legislature to the people, including the women of the State, since their fundamental principle in advocating woman suffrage, as I understand it, has been that it is unjust to deprive a class in the community of the vote against its will. Conceding the justice of this contention, it would seem to be a logical corollary thereof that it is equally unjust to force the franchise upon the women of the State against their will, since to all right thinking citizens the franchise is not merely a privilege, but a duty and an obligation. In other words, if all the women have the franchise, it will be the duty of them all to exercise it, as is the case today with the men. The course suggested would afford to the women of the State the opportunity which in common justice is their due, to declare their will in regard to suffrage. It would also have the advantage, whichever way the question should be decided in 1919, of forever settling the question whether the women themselves really desire the franchise.

The Starving Armenians and Syrians.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Two and one-half million Armenians and Syrians are starving. This is a cry to every family in America. We have plenty; they have almost nothing. Why should we not adopt a scheme of giving that will reach every home, every family board, every man, woman, and child in the country?

If no better plan can be suggested, let every family have a small savings bank. A pasteboard box or china cup will serve the purpose, into which every member of the family, after each meal, shall place a coin, if only a penny, for the starving. That coin will be the thank offering for the meal. It will teach the giver the joy of giving. It will help to produce wonderful results for the Armenians and Syrians; and what a lesson to the children it will be, when they ask their parents, "What mean ye by this service?"

Money so collected, no matter how small the amount, can be handed to any priest, minister, or rabbi, who will gladly forward it to Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge, Treasurer, American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, 1 Madison Avenue, New York. The expense of collecting and transmitting funds is met privately. One hundred cents for every dollar contributed goes to the immediate work of relief.

It is hoped that this plan, in default of a better one, will be noticed in all newspapers.

FOR A "LOYALIST" PARTY.

The War Expected to Change the Present Party Lines.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Those of us who reside in rural districts have long been aware of the spirit of discontent which animates a very large proportion of the rural population at the present time, of the half sullen protest which accompanies the necessary acquiescence in the draft, the increased taxation, and the rapid advance in the cost of living. In the country the war is very generally regarded as a "rich man's war," or at least a war in which we Americans have no vital interest, and into which there was no call for us to enter.

That this same spirit of unrest and discontent also animates an important part of the city electorates would seem to be proved by the ominously large vote which was cast for the Socialist candidate in the present municipal election in Greater New York; and also by the election of the Tammany candidate, who was openly accused of pro-German sympathies.

Now, if this same spirit should make itself felt in the coming nation-wide elections for Congress, in what position, may I ask, would we find ourselves if the dark fates should confront us with an eventual German invasion of our shores?

However, it must, I think, be frankly admitted that one cheerful ray of light pierces the murk which partially envelops us as a nation. The spirit of unrest which I have mentioned is in no respect due to lack of patriotic feeling or of willingness to stand by the country in case of real need. Many of the worst discontents, indeed, would fly to arms in case our frontiers were really invaded. It is due rather to lack of knowledge of the real conditions as they surround us and to lack of the foresight which can grow only out of such knowledge.

It is, however, full time that we discard or sidetrack our old and outworn political parties and their old and outworn names and titles—Republican, Democratic, Populist, Socialist, Independent, &c. They have no possible connection with the terribly vital issues of our own time. They serve only to becloud and befog the present-day question of questions—or at best to keep the grafter in touch with the spoils.

At the present moment but two parties are needed to express the will of the people, and if one of these could be named the "Loyalist" party and the other could bear the title of the "Copperhead" party, or some equally illuminating and descriptive soubriquet, the only two great issues which exist today would have a genuine flag and token beneath which its votaries could rally.

If this could be brought about, I am convinced that an overwhelming majority of the electorate would rally to the "Loyalist" flag, for essentially and at heart an overwhelming majority of our citizens are truly loyal and patriotic.

The New Plea for Submission.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In today's news we learn that the so-called People's Council is planning a renewed assault on Congress, with a new slogan, "Peace by negotiation—now."

One wearies a bit of this talk of peace by negotiation, as if the attempt to attain peace by such means were a new and untried experiment. As a matter of fact, the President tried it for nearly two years. For that myth of time after the sinking of the Lusitania the President attempted exactly the thing now urged by the pacifists and Socialists, namely, peace by negotiation. At the end of that time he came before Congress and announced that his negotiations had failed; that peace by negotiation with Germany was an impossibility; that the time had come to "conquer or submit." In urging now, not a beginning, but a renewal, of such negotiations, the pacifists are simply urging the counsel of submission. The issue is clear. The American people must either go forth with the President to conquer, or stay with the "People's Council" and submit to Prussian autocracy.

Hannibal's "Tanks."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

An almost complete parallel to the use of the tanks at Cambrai can be found in Hannibal's employment of elephants at the battle of Zama, 202 B. C. [But Hannibal was defeated.]

In both battles cavalry enjoyed a personal acquaintance with the enemy denied to civilians.

SEES WAR REMAKING COLLEGES IN AMERICA

Dean Keppel of Columbia Says Reorganization Will Follow the Conflict.

LAUDS STUDENTS IN SERVICE

Declares Parental Attitude Toward Pupils Will Not Be Limited to Personal Morals or Conduct.

The war will cause a reorganization and rejuvenation of the structure of the American university, according to Dean Frederick Paul Keppel of Columbia College, who is now acting as assistant to Secretary of War Baker. In his annual report to the authorities of Columbia University, Dean Keppel pays a high tribute to the rôle of the college men in the war.

"The entry of the United States into the war," says Dean Keppel in his report, "will prove to be a stimulus which will profoundly change the nature, not only of countless American collegians, but of the American college itself. It is too early to grasp the full significance, but that the results will be far reaching, and will not be merely along lines of military training and efficiency is certain.

"Much of the activity has been typical of a desire on the part of all ages and classes of an overwrought nation to do something, and thereby obtain the relief that comes with an emotional discharge. Much also has been said along the lines of existing convention, and of the herding instinct, but these factors are of minor import. To understand some of the changes it should be said, also, we must turn back to forces which have been developing, often unrecognized, for years; forces which have been awaiting some such cataclysm to find an outlet.

"Out of the mass of individual events, two very significant general facts may be recognized. In the first place the young man in college who has failed to ask himself how he may best take his share in the nation's responsibility is the rare exception. Their action has been marked not only by proper recognition of the emergency, but by a high degree of intelligence of choice—from the glorious risks of the Aviation Corps to the humdrum work of tilling the fields, or, even harder, decision to finish a course in order to be of greater service later on. As a whole, the undergraduates and young alumni of our colleges have made a record of which the nation may well be proud.

"No one except a few paciphobes who had been alarmed at the growing habit of undergraduates to think for themselves, feared that our students as individuals would stand back in the fear of hardship or danger when the new call to arms should come, any more than they did in '61 and '98; but very few, if any, realized how complete a revolution in our apparently hard-and-fast institutional and social life would be the result, or that this could come almost as a matter of course. The students gave up without a moment's hesitation their cherished games and gatherings and all the careless, but comfortable, routine of their daily lives. In Columbia College, for example, out of 1,453 students who registered at the beginning of the second half year, no fewer than 629 had entered some form of national service before commencement.

Many Teachers Released.

"The second outstanding fact is that ruthless changes may be made in the organic fabric of our colleges without interfering with the essential vitality of the institution. Faculties which had seemed forever committed to what they believed to be the only sound standards of education cast away their measuring rod and rule books and gave credit for all sorts of vocational laboratory courses offered by the school of experience. Teachers have been released right and left for national service, and their colleagues are gladly shouldering the additional burdens thus laid upon them.

"Throughout the country the importance of keeping the undergraduate machine in good working order, and of keeping the younger boys at work, was perhaps overlooked at first, in spite of the tragic example furnished by England in the early days of the war; but it has now been generally recognized.

"It will be hard, but it will be necessary, for the colleges to make the students of real possibilities realize that the long road of preparation for scientific and scholarly achievement is for them a patriotic road. Not only the United States, but the world at large, will need, as never before, doctors and engineers and chemists of the broadest possible training; but it will need even more intellectual leaders of thorough historical and social preparation for the days to come. When boys of this type withdraw for active service, as many of them will, they should be drawn back after the war, if necessary, on their own terms. In order to hold the present undergraduates who are not of the draft age it will undoubtedly be necessary to provide military training more generally than has been our previous national habit, for it would be too much to expect these boys to look far enough into the future to recognize the practical value of purely cultural studies. They and the country at large will demand something more concrete.

"How long the military training will remain a part of the curriculum and how permanent will be the present close connection between scholarly and military affairs it is too soon to say.

"At any rate, the colleges will not have fulfilled their function until they have played their part in the work of reconstruction and reconciliation which must follow the war. If the result is to be a real victory for humanity, it is for them to break away, when necessary, from the trammels of a conventionalized and unthinking patriotism to remind the nations that justice and liberty are as necessary as they were in 1776.

College Life Changes.

"It is also too soon to foretell what permanent changes the war will work in the organization and administration of the colleges and in student life, but that these changes will be profound there is little doubt. Faculties and students alike will have already learned that regulations and customs which seem to be of the very essence of collegiate structure can be swept aside without shock, to say nothing of catastrophe. When the normal course is resumed, many of these will never be restored or will be in a form unrecognizable. On the other hand, certain tendencies which had been at work sometimes for years preceding the war will be greatly accelerated, and will come to fruition without the bitter struggle which would otherwise have been inevitable.

"The change in the Faculty point of view which, of course, has operated and will operate with varying intensity in different institutions will, I think, be along the following lines:

"In the first place, the parental attitude which the American college has always maintained toward its students will no longer be limited to matters of personal morals or conduct, but will include the student's public usefulness, a recognition of his place in the public order. It will mean changes in the curriculum to provide for such usefulness, not alone in military subjects, but in geography and international studies, and in other fields. It will involve also an increased realization of the importance of the physical fitness of the group, as a whole, as contrasted with the possession of winning teams of specialists.

"The colleges should plan to profit by the present public recognition of the part played by the non-technical undergraduate courses and by the best elements in college life in producing a type of resourceful young men, willing and ready to take a responsible part in any national emergency."

COURT TO PASS ON LIFE TENANT TRUST

Will Decide What Disposition Shall Be Made of Gains in Property Values.

QUESTION LONG IN DOUBT

Opinion Will Be Given in Case of Albert Schaefer, Who Sued the Trustees of His Father's Estate.

The question whether the life tenant of a trust estate is entitled to receive in cash any advance in the value of the property constituting the estate, or whether the increase shall go to swell the bulk of the estate for the benefit of the remainder men while the life tenant receives only the interest earned by the increase, is soon to be answered by the Court of Appeals. It is a question that has puzzled trust companies and individual trustees for a long time, and the final decision, it was said yesterday, would affect property worth many millions.

In the case at bar Albert Schaefer, son of the late Frederick Schaefer, a brewer, who died in May, 1897, is seeking to compel Edward C. and George G. Schaefer, the trustees of the estate, to pay him the difference between $200 a share on 500 shares of the stock of the F. & M. Schaefer Brewing Company, which was its value when the property passed into the control of the trustees, and $415 a share, for which the stock was sold to the brewing company.

The proceeds of the sale went into the trust estate and swelled the income of the plaintiff, but the latter wants the increase in the value in cash. As a reason for the demand he explains that he is 57 years old, that he has no children, and that he is anxious to provide for his wife. His counsel, Axel Josephsson, applied to the Surrogate's Court for an order directing the trustees to pay to the plaintiff the increase in the value of the stock.

Decision Is Reversed.

Several points were raised, but the referee to whom the matter was sent found against the plaintiff in the main point—that of the transfer of the amount of increment in value. The Surrogate sustained the referee's report, but this decision was reversed by the Appellate Division in two opinions written by Justices Scott and Shearn. In brief, the decision was that when the question of the distribution of profits of corporations between life tenants and remaindermen arose the life tenant should not be deprived of his share of the surplus earnings, but should receive his apportionment of the surplus.

Both opinions indorse the methods of the Trustees in their care of the estate, and it is pointed out by Justice Shearn that the surplus of the company increased from $590,000 in 1897 to $1,100,000 in 1912.

"In other words," he said, "$34,000 a year on the average was retained and put into surplus." Concerning the issues to be decided, Justice Shearn said: "The question is a novel and an important one, and no case similar to it has been cited by counsel or is referred to in the leading cases that have elaborately reviewed the development of the principle of apportionment of earnings between life tenants and remaindermen."

Further on the opinion reads: "It is sound business policy to carry some substantial part of a corporation's earnings into surplus, not only to enable the payment of dividends in lean years, but to prevent disaster to the corporation in a year of loss. The corporation itself and all its stockholders are entitled to have such a policy pursued, and to deny such right would be a substantial injustice to the corporation and to all of its stockholders. Where a stockholder is a Trustee the remainderman is necessarily interested in having the corpus of the trust estate protected by the maintenance of a reasonable and safe surplus."

Concerning the contention of the plaintiff that the increased value of the stock was due to the fact that the company paid no dividends some years and only small dividends in other years, Justice Scott said:

"It is conceded that during the years that the Trustees held this stock the company did not distribute all of its profits by way of dividends, but prudently retained each year a portion of the net earnings or profits as a surplus. These profits thus retained went to the enhancement of the assets, and it is to the retention and investment of this surplus that at least some of the increased value of the stock is to be attributed. The Trustees have credited to the capital of the trust the whole proceeds of the 500 shares of stock which they held for the benefit of Albert Schaefer. He claims that he is entitled to be paid so much of that sum as represents the income and profits earned, but not distributed, by way of profits.

New Phase of Question.

"This presents in a somewhat new phase the question, much discussed in recent years, as to the distribution of the profits of a corporation between life tenants and remaindermen."

Justice Scott said that the consensus of all the decisions upon the general subject was that ordinary cash dividends belong to the life tenant or beneficiary of the estate, and added:

"That extraordinary dividends representing accumulated profits, whether distributed in cash or in the form of stock, are to be apportioned between the corpus of the trust and the income, in the proportion in which the surplus thus distributed has been earned before or after the creation of the trust fund. This apportionment is made in order to preserve the integrity of the trust fund, and at the same time conserve the rights of the life beneficiary.

"When a corporation is liquidated, its assets sold, and the proceeds distributed among its stockholders, an apportionment must be made between the capital of the trust fund and the income, and so much of the sum received by the Trustees as represents profits accumulated since the creation of the trust must be attributed to income and paid to the life tenant; otherwise there would result an increase in the corpus of the fund by accumulations of income which, except for the benefit of infants, is against public policy and expressly condemned by statute."

Ashbel P. Fitch represents the defendants.

Family Needs $10 a Week.

Heartbroken and in desperate fear that she may have to give up her children, Mr. "Hardy," a resident for many years in the East New York section of Brooklyn, has appealed for assistance to the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities. The doctors told her husband that his only hope for a cure from the tuberculosis which had fastened on him was sanatorium treatment. So, in order that he might be spared to his wife and the four little ones, the oldest only six and the youngest a mere infant, he gave up his carpentry work, which has supported them for eleven years and went away for treatment. He is improving slowly and there is hope for his complete cure, but his recovery is retarded by his constant fears for the welfare of his family. He knows that Mrs. "Hardy" is not strong and that the care of the children makes it impossible for her to do any outside work. The Bureau has found the home to be an excellent one and wishes to provide a weekly allowance of $10 for food and other necessities until the father again is able to support his family. No better cheer could be given this invalid at Thanksgiving than the assurance that his dear ones were being looked after. Large or small contributions toward a fund of $125 for this family may be mailed to the Bureau at 69 Schermerhorn Street, Brooklyn, marked "for 0344T."

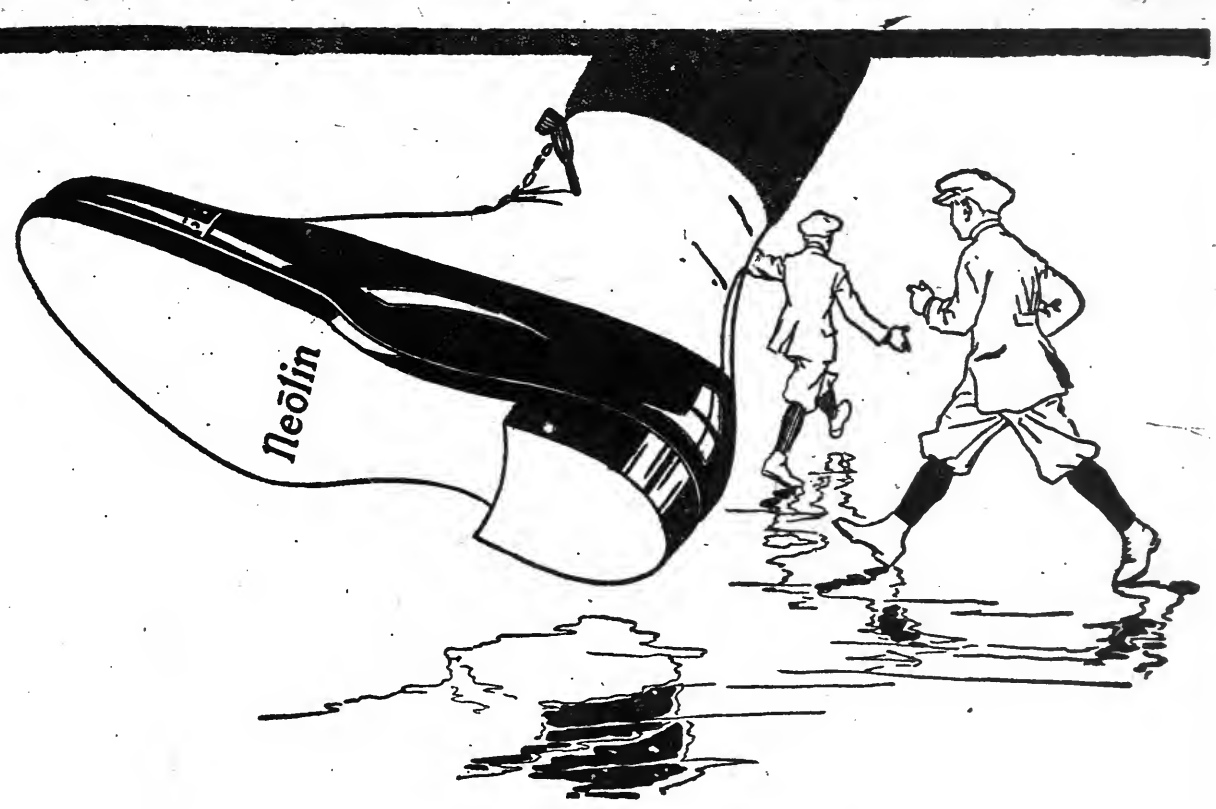
Cutting Down Your Children's Shoe Bills



ONE of the biggest bills you have to face is the cost of your children's shoes—the climbing price of new shoes and the rising cost of repairs.

Because Neōlin Soles wear from two to six times as long as ordinary leather, they materially reduce repair charges.

And because Neōlin Soles are waterproof they give old shoes new life and make new shoes last longer than with ordinary soles.

Ordinary soles are not waterproof. After one thorough wetting they become spongy and porous, so that they easily soak up—literally breathe in—the moisture from damp playgrounds, from snow underfoot, from muddied crossings, and even from the thin film of water on pavements after showers and thaws.

Then the constant pressure of the walking or running foot stretches the welts and seams so that the shoes lose shape and wear out quickly.

But Neōlin Soles protect the uppers from this damage because they are waterproof.

And this waterproofness not only saves shoe bills, but doctors' bills, too.

For children with the constantly damp feet that ordinary soles cause, are always in danger of colds.

Eight million pairs of American feet have proved Neōlin's greater saving and its greater comfort, too. For Neōlin-soled shoes are so comfortable that they require no breaking in.

Be sure to have your children's new fall and winter shoes soled with Neōlin. And when you have their worn shoes re-soled, have it done with Neōlin.

Neōlin comes in black, white and tan—on and for men's, women's, boys' and girls' shoes—and it always bears the brand Neōlin.

Mark that mark, stamp it on your memory—Neōlin

BLACK'S ALL-STARS JOLTED BY RUTGERS

Sanford's Youngsters Spring Surprise on Naval Reserve's Team of Veterans.

SAILORS ARE OUTPLAYED

College Lads, Undaunted by Noted Names Like Barrett, Schlacter, and Gerrish, Win by 14 to 0.

Cupid Black's collection of former college football stars from the Second Naval Reserve station at Newport, which was generally supposed to be invincible, collided head on with Rutgers at Ebbets Field yesterday. The Newport sailors saw stars and Roman candles after the stunning shock, and went down in defeat by a score of 14 to 0 in one of the most surprising games of a topsy-turvy gridiron season.

This great victory of the youthful Rutgers eleven over a team which boasted of many All-American celebrities is a big feather in the cap of the Rutgers lads, and is also the fulfillment of a prophecy by their coach, George Foster Sanford, who has been lauding his eleven this year as one of exceptional skill. Sanford was right, for a better-drilled or more carefully disciplined eleven has not been seen hereabouts in a long time.

By the very speed of its charge, the smooth, precise development of its tactics, and the snap and dash of its defense, Rutgers accomplished wonders against eleven players who rank as the greatest products of the Eastern and Western gridiron. It was the triumph of a highly drilled team, schooled to a high standard of team play, backed by the spirit of youth and a gameness and courage which wasn't for an instant disturbed by the awe-inspiring presence of Cupid Black, Charley Barrett, Schlacter, Gerrish, and the other football Moguls, whose names have gone echoing down the corridors of fame.

Naval Team Outplayed.

Rutgers outplayed the Naval Reserves from start to finish. They scored both touchdowns in the second period, the first after a triumphant march of 50 yards, during which the Rutgers backs, Frank Kelly, Turk Gardner, and Mike Whitehill, aided in every plunge by Baker, the little quarter back, split the heavy Newport line asunder and pried their way through, a few yards at a time, until Whitehill tore over the line with a touchdown. In the same period, when Whitehill boomed away a long punt to their opponents, which sailed far down to the Newport 5-yard line, Hite, the quarter back from Kentucky, fumbled the ball, and Neuschaefer, Rutgers's left wing, pounced on it. Then in a jiffy Whitehill heaved a forward pass to Robeson, Rutgers's towering negro end, who nipped the ball from the air as he stood on the goal line and dropped on the ball over the forbidding chalk mark for another touchdown. Turk Gardner's trusty boot put over the two goals after the touchdowns.

A crowd of about 12,000, most of them Rutgers sympathizers, sat through the chilly afternoon and rejoiced with the New Brunswick boys in their victory. It was quite the most meritorious thing that a Rutgers eleven has done in many years. They went into the game with Black's picked experts overwhelming favorites. The Newport aggregation has not been defeated this season, and has ridden roughshod over all of its opponents.

Rejoicing in Rutgers Camp.

So when Rutgers began to bowl over Uncle Sam's giants the fever of the Rutgers students blazed through the frost-bitten crowd and there was high jubilation as the Rutgers lads buried the noses of Black and his associates in the turf of Ebbets Field. Between the halves the Rutgers students paraded around the gridiron and filled the air with their yells and songs.

Banks of the Old Raritan" echoed through Flatbush and old Rutgers graduates hugged themselves and each other in glee and laughed at the perils of pneumonia as they took off their hats and threw them into the air.

When the Rutgers parade was finished the line of students formed into a great human letter "R." The big gathering of sailors who came from Newport with the team to see their team win another victory ran around the gridiron to keep warm and then lined up and gave Rutgers a cheer.

Cupid Black had a very uncomfortable afternoon. He played against Rollins, and this youngster gave the great Yale guard the time of his life. Time and again Black was tumbled out of the way, while Rollins went through and stopped both Barrett and Gerrish in their flight. During the whole game the Naval Reserves made only two first downs. One of these was a wild dash by Charley Barrett in the second period, and later in the game Newport again made first down on four desperate charges into the Rutgers line and their margin was so close that the distance had to be measured before the officials were sure that they had made it.

The naval men did hardly any rushing with the ball. In fact, only for a few minutes of the game did Newport have the ball in Rutgers territory. Barrett and Gerrish got loose only once or twice. The work of Robeson, Rollins, and Whitehill on the defense was so brilliant that they broke up the Naval Reserve plays in the making. For a line which had the bulk and beef of the Naval Reserve team and with such accomplished performers as Black, Schlacter, Callahan, Elwood, and Green, their showing against Rutgers fast, low-charging forwards, was a poor exhibition. Rutgers had the jump on them every time and the expected dashes of Barrett and Gerrish did not materialize.

Kelly Star of Attack.

Frank Kelly was the bright spot in the Rutgers backfield when it came to penetrating the Naval Reserve line. This youth, not very large, but who hops around as if he were on springs, pried through openings which his forwards made with irresistible plunges. Kelly hammered away at Cupid Black's line until it seemed that the boy must drop from exhaustion. But after every sortie into his giant opponents Kelly came up smiling and ever ready to take the ball again.

Sanford's team was trained to the minute and the fact that they went through this gruelling contest without substitution shows the great physical condition of the team. The continual smashing told on Kelly toward the end of the game, but in the last few rushes, he was a picture of football perfection. A ferocious tackle by Haas sent Kelly sprawling on the turf so hard that when he came up the blood was trickling from his nose. There was a smile of triumph on his blood-smeared face and again and again he tore into the Newport line for big gains.

It wasn't individual brilliancy however, that won for Rutgers. It was the splendid co-ordination of effort which Sanford has instilled into this team of green young players. Newport relied entirely on the brilliancy of its performers, but the advantage of age and experience wasn't enough to match Rutgers' team play. The speed and skill of Rutgers made the desperate efforts of Barrett and Gerrish in the back field futile.

Sailors Penalized at Start.

Gerrish kicked off for the Reserves and Kelly caught the pigskin on the fifteen-yard line and ran it back ten yards before he was tumbled. The Naval eleven was penalized fifteen yards for holding at the very outset, and then three lunges by Kelly, Whitehill, and Gardner gave Rutgers their first down and the Rutgers students began to chant "Oh, oh, Poor Cupid" as Yale's former star found himself smothered in the melée of Rutgers players.

Then began a procession of real old-fashioned football. Little Baker, the quarter back, snapped out his signals in rapid succession. Kelly, Whitehill, and Gardner took turns at jamming through the Newport line a few yards at a clip. The great All-American tackles, Black and Schlacter, were swept aside before the Rutgers assault. The parade advanced slowly and surely. The chalk marks were left behind one after another until Rutgers had pushed the husky sailors back from Rutgers twenty-five-yard line to Newport's twenty-five-yard line, a distance of fifty yards.

On the 25-yard line, Black hammered his players frantically on the backs and begged them to stop the onslaught. Rutgers found it hard sledding and couldn't gain the distance on four downs and on the last down Baker called for a forward pass and the ball went to Newport on downs. This was the one error of judgment which Rutgers made, for here was a chance for their famous multiple kick which they failed to grasp. Later in the game, however, they tried the kick but it failed.

When Newport took the ball on the 20-yard line the spectators expected to see something dazzling happen. Barrett took the ball and smashed into the line, but he stopped short. Then Gerrish went plowing forward, but he also was crumpled up in a heap by Rollins. Then Barrett couldn't gain and was forced to punt. Rutgers getting the ball on their own 38-yard line. Then began the steady unerring journey of 60 yards to the Naval Reserves' goal line.

Display Great Game.

It was a great exhibition of football and a striking example of what a well-drilled eleven can do with the old-time line smashing tactics. It was the quick deadly charge of the Rutgers forwards which made it possible for the New Brunswick backs to dodge their way through the openings. In this trip to the goal line there was one forward pass which Whitehill tossed to Robinson, which netted Rutgers 15 yards.

Rutgers had the ball down on the 28-yard line when the first period ended, and early in the second period the Rutgers backs speared the Naval Reserve line for short, steady gains, and Whitehill carried the ball over.

On the next kick-off Rutgers worked a trick on the old-timers which took them completely by surprise. On the kick-off Robeson merely tumbled the ball from the mound of dirt, and then had to tee it up again. This time he approached it slowly, while Baker came up from behind him and kicked an on-side kick over to the left wing to Elwood. The ball hit Elwood, but bounced away, and Kelly jumped on it. It was Rutgers's ball on Newport's 43-yard line. Rutgers fumbled on the next play, but recovered.

The loss occasioned by the fumble gave Rutgers a hard task to make their distance of 10 yards, so Whitehill punted to Hite, who tried to catch the ball and fumbled. Neuschaefer falling on the ball on the Reserves' 5-yard line. The New Brunswick team was then penalized 5 yards for off-side play, and Baker tried to jam his way through, but got only a yard. On a pretty lateral pass, Whitehill to Kelly, the ball was advanced to the 6-yard line.

Whitehill dropped back and took the ball on a long pass from the centre, while Robeson in the meantime had rushed through the Newport players and was waiting just at the goal line. He reached up and grasped the ball as the naval men were upon him, and all went down in a great heap. When the pile of players was unraveled, the ball was about six inches from the goal line, but the officials ruled that the ball had gone over, and Rutgers got another touchdown.

LAFAYETTE MAY LOSE TEAM.

Entire Football Squad Eligible for War Service.

EASTON, Penn., Nov. 24.—In looking forward to the next football season, prospects at Lafayette are none too this year's team among those who will resy. There may not be a member of be candidates next year. Six of the players are above the age of 21 years, and not being married or having any dependents will be among the first called in the selective draft according to the new classification. The other members of the team will all be included if the age of registration is lowered to 19 years.

Weldon, Scott, and Lake would have formed the nucleus of Lafayette's team of 1917. In order to give their activities the greatest efficacy in the backfield there was a splendid line of veterans before them. The whole thing was swept away, and all that remained for Coach Berryman when he, as a newcomer, arrived on March Field was one letter man Brandes, who was drafted during the first week of college, and Henry Lehr, who played in a few of the games of last year.

COLUMBIA ELEVEN BEATEN BY N. Y. U.

Blue and White Winds Up a Season of Bungling by Throwing Opportunities Away.

VIOLET LINE TIGHTENS UP

Morningside Heights Men Find Opposing Forwards Invulnerable After First Half—Score, 9 to 7.

Columbia closed its season of football disasters yesterday when the Blue and White was forced to bow in defeat before the New York University eleven in a battle on South Field by a score of 9 to 7. As far as the Morningside men are concerned, the game simply represents golden opportunities trodden under foot with a wantonness that could have brought no other ending to the fray. The old fault of fumbling, which has caused anguish to the Columbia coaches in the past, was again injected into the contest, and the Blue and White skidded along to disaster.

At the outset the situation looked promising for the Morningside collegians. The Violet line opposing did not appear to be so perfectly welded that it could stand the assault of the Blue and White backs, and for the first half of the game Columbia was the aggressor. The pounding by Columbia of the rival defense, however, served to cement it more firmly rather than to disrupt it, as might have been expected, and Columbia found herself within striking distance of a score there was an unmovable barrier raised by the Violet.

The first score of the game, a touchdown by Gardiner of New York University in the second quarter, was really an achievement to which Columbia contributed as largely as did N. Y. U. The score was accomplished in just two plays and the Violet athletes took the ball the length of the field.

Two minutes before the touchdown was made Columbia had been hammering away at the Violet defense in an effort to break through for a score, which it seemed must go to the Blue and White. The Violet line, however held, took the ball on downs and then Egan endeavored to kick out of danger but only succeeded in sending a miserable effort to his own twenty-five-yard line.

Columbia gathered for another assault, but fumbled on the first play. Out of the scramble appeared Gardiner of N. Y. U. with the ball clutched tightly in his arms, and he scampered down the field, hotly pursued by Rosen of Columbia. The latter gained at every stride, but it was not until the goal line was reached that he could make the tackle, and both men slid over the line. Egan failed to kick the goal.

It was near the close of the third quarter that Columbia scored, and in a measure Shaw made up for the shortcoming of his earlier fumble, which permitted the N. Y. U. to record a touchdown. The Columbia full back intercepted a forward pass and raced fifty-five yards for the touchdown. Cochran kicked the goal. This gave Columbia a margin of one point and there was wild rejoicing in the Columbia stand but it was shortlived. New York University was showing prowess which the earlier play had not evidenced and in the final quarter Columbia was in grave danger at all times. Big holes were torn in the line and the ends were turned by the fleet-footed Egan without serious opposition.

Egan played a remarkable game as an aggressive back; in fact, he was the only one whom New York University could rely upon to gain ground consistently, but as a punter he was a miserable failure. Yet out of his failure as a kicker came directly the opportunity for the field goal which gave victory to the Violet. N. Y. U., near the middle of the last quarter, began an assault that shattered the Columbia defense to bits.

From midfield the ball went steadily forward until it was within Columbia's twenty-yard line. Here the Blue and White held and Egan, not convinced yet that his kicking apparatus was working poorly, tried a drop kick. It was prettily blocked, and the leather danced tantalizingly in front of a Columbia man, only to scape and be captured by N. Y. U. This gave the Violet first down with practically no loss of distance, and Columbia had to brace for another attack.

Again N. Y. U. was held, and Egan dropped back for another try at a field goal. This time he was even nearer the rival goal posts. He stood on the twenty-yard line, to receive the pass. The centre was evidently nervous—for the ball dug its nose into the ground as it came toward Egan, and it seemed as if he could not recover his position in time to get the leather away before the Columbia linemen should storm through upon him. However, where Egan had made a miserable failure on a good pass, he now achieved success with a bad one, for he scooped up the ball and booted high over the cross bar for the points that humbled Columbia.

The chief fault with the Columbia eleven, aside from its fumbles, was lack of discrimination in judgment when the team was in possession of scoring opportunities. The situation in the second quarter just before Gardiner made his touchdown was simply an example of others throughout the contest. Columbia had the ball close to the N. Y. U. goal, only to be led into a repeated line attack when it was easy to see that it was pitted against a spirited and strengthening Violet defense. With five yards to go for a touchdown and fourth down, Columbia, directly in front of the goal posts, could easily have called Cochran into service as a drop kicker and would have been reasonably sure of his sending the ball true from the eighteen or twenty yard line. Rushing was elected, however, and N. Y. U. rolled back the attack and took the ball on downs, whereupon followed the two plays which gave the Violet its touchdown.

Columbia appeared to be lacking in judgment, too, in the kicking department. It seemed evident from the outset of the game that Houlahan was far the superior punter in this particular, yet Columbia failed to take advantage of the consistent gaining which would have been possible by a kicking duel.

With New York University leading, Columbia loosed her aerial game in the final moments of the fourth quarter in an effort to get a lucky break which would permit of a touchdown, but the air attack was lacking in the vital feature of finding a player who could complete the plays by receiving the pass. Recollection of the battle fails to visualize a single forward pass that was successfully executed by the Columbia men. On the other hand, N. Y. U. made efficient use of the overhead game at various moments of the contest. Several big gains were made by passes that shot from Egan to Gardiner.

MINOT'S LONG DASH BEATS CAMP UPTON

Former Harvard Player Brings Victory to Soldiers of Camp Devens, 7 to 0.

TEAMS EVENLY MATCHED

Lone Touchdown and Consequent Goal Only Scoring Done as Service Elevens Clash.

Starting from his own forty-yard line on a fake kick formation, Lieutenant Minot of Camp Devens, full back on the Harvard 'Varsity two years ago, dodged his way past the forwards of Camp Upton, shook off two ambitious tacklers of the secondary defense and dashed past the last guardian of the Camp Upton goal for the only touchdown of the game between the Ayer soldiers and the Yaphank soldiers played at the Polo Grounds yesterday. This triumphant dash by Minot was the one spectacular incident in a bitterly-fought battle, which was waged on surprisingly even terms and found neither team capable of any concentrated attack and both strong on the defense.

The raw day kept the crowd down to less than 5,000, but those present had a chance to see some of the football stars of the college world of a year ago and also were treated to a drill by selected squads from the 307th Infantry of Camp Upton. The military feature of the day brought forth greater commendation from the spectators than the football treat. Marching to the music of the 307th band and led by Lieutenant Bacon of the Headquarters Company, Lieutenant McDermott of K Company, and Lieutenant Cichy of G Company, the men of the national army selected from New York astonished the visiting officers by the precision of their drill.

Their every evolution was received by applause and there was nothing left undone. Some of the officers present remarked that it reminded them of a year ago yesterday, when at the Polo Grounds the Cadets from West Point and the Midshipmen from Annapolis drilled on the field before the Army and Navy gave battle across the gridiron.

Devens Uses Harvard Attack.

The football game was the main issue of the day, however, and the drill had to take a secondary place. The Camp Devens team, coached by Percy D. Haughton of Harvard fame and containing seven former Harvard stars in its lineup, presented a Harvard attack almost entirely, but hardly with the results often obtained by Harvard teams. With Minot, Thatcher, and Robinson in the backfield, all of whom formerly played under Haughton, and Coolidge and Whitney, two Harvard ends, playing in those positions for Camp Devens, the interference for the runners was Crimson in its makeup. Camp Devens masked each of its plays well, drove fiercely on the attack, and gained ground consistently, but it had no reserve power when within striking distance of the Camp Upton goal line.

The Yaphank team had a wonderfully strong and clever line and one backfield man who easily stood out as the star of the game, but the team lacked an offensive and was unable to advance the ball. Blair, a former Maryland University player, was the leading light of Camp Upton. He did the punting for his team and kicked so consistently around fifty yards that the visitors from Ayer continually were forced on to the defensive. Blair also carried the ball with the only really powerful attack exhibited by the Yaphank eleven.

Frank Glick, formerly of Princeton and now civilian aid to General Bell, who taught the Camp Upton team its football, got into the game in the second quarter after Lieutenant Paul Roth, a former Cornell player, had been kicked in the head while attempting to stop Minot on his sixty-yard dash for the touchdown which decided the issue. Roth was knocked out completely, and needed medical attention. He was taken to Seney Hospital in Brooklyn suffering from lacerations of the right eye and a possible fracture of the skull. Roth had been playing quarter back and Glick took his place. Glick was expected to open up an attack, and attempted to do so with short forward passes, but the old Haughton defense for this play, as exemplified by Thatcher and Minot, cost the Upton team dearly, as invariably either Thatcher or Minot intercepted the pass and took away the ball.

Blagdon Forgets His Years.

Hayes, formerly of Colgate, at end for Camp Upton, and Crawford Blagdon, who made football history at Harvard in 1901, were the outstanding forwards of the local team. Blagdon, despite his gray hair and his years spilled more Camp Devens plays than any other man on the field. Blagdon proved conclusively that he has not forgotten the kind of football which brought the Harvard Varsity of 1901 supreme recognition.

The game was mostly a punting duel with Blair having much the better of the argument with Minot and Palmer a former Massachusetts Aggie full back. Blair forced the visitors to punt from their own territory on almost every exchange. The visitors realized early that there was no chance for a smashing attack, so the only plays tried were criss-crosses, lateral passes and double passes and runs from kick formation. And usually only one off play was tried before a punt was called for.

The first quarter found little to choose between the two teams. Blair kicked off for Upton to Palmer, who was down on his own twenty-five-yard line. Minot then circled the end from a kick formation for fifteen yards and then punted on the next play. Blair immediately returned a punt, and Devens brought off a criss-cross. Robinson to Minot, which was good for fifteen more yards. Thatcher fumbled at this point just when it seemed the visitors were about to develop an attack and Upton recovered. Upton tried to advance the ball, but when Grieb failed to gain and a forward pass grounded, Blair was called upon to kick again. The period ended with Upton in possession of the ball on its own twenty-yard line.

Blair punted on the first play of the second period, and Robinson was downed on his own forty-yard line. On the next play Minot took the ball from a kick formation and made his sixty-yard run which resulted in the touchdown. Palmer kicked the goal. On the kickoff Minot was injured and retired for the rest of the period. With Minot off the field the attack of the visitors was as weak as that of Upton, and for the rest of the half there was nothing of moment.

It was not until the last period that Upton could make any advance, and Devens was unable to do anything at all for the rest of the game. In the last period rushes by Blair, Glick and Colbath, formerly of Bowdoin, brought a first down. Then, in an exchange of punts, Coolidge overran a kick and Devens was penalized fifteen yards. On the next play Thatcher interfered with the catching of a forward pass and Upton had the ball on Devens's fifteen-yard line. Soldiers of Upton were calling for a touchdown, but Glick called for a forward pass, and it was intercepted. Devens immediately booted the ball out of danger, and Upton lost its last chance to at least tie the score.

ARMY HAS BATTLE TO DEFEAT BOSTON

Brickley's Team Yields Only to the Great Work of Oliphant and Vandegraff.

PUNTING CHECKS CADETS

Fitzpatrick's Kicks Prevent Early Damage, but Thoughtlessness of Coach Costs Game, 13 to 7.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Nov. 24.—The Army wound up its football season this afternoon with a victory over Charley Brickley's Boston College eleven 13 to 7. The Hub collegians had a well drilled eleven, with plenty of fight and a defense which the soldiers found stiffer than any they have encountered since the Notre Dame game.

Brickley exhibited a punter in Fitzpatrick, a left foot kicker, whose equal has not been seen on the Army's gridiron in many years. His long, high spirals, beautifully timed, set the Army back on nearly every occasion, and were largely responsible for several advantageous positions in which the collegians found themselves.

The teams fought an even contest for the first two periods, neither side being able to penetrate the other's defense for any long gains. Brickley's men once found themselves on the Army's twenty-five-yard line, this in the first quarter, a forward pass, Fitzpatrick to Urban, putting the ball on this mark. Although the collegians bucked centre and end tackle repeatedly they failed to make the Army's line yield and Fitzpatrick essayed a field goal. Big Knight, the Army's tackle, blocked the kick. It was the nearest to a score during the first half of the game.

"Bull" Vandegraff, former Alabama University star, who has been idle since the Army's first game of the season, got into the fray in the third period and made his presence felt. He dashed once for a fifty-yard run and took up the burden of the kicking game. Vandegraff opened holes through his opponents, the fleet Army backs sifting through for long gains.

A dash by Oliphant of forty-five yards early in the third period paved the way to the Cadets' first touchdown. Fitzpatrick's try for field goal from the forty-yard mark fell short of the posts and Oliphant, catching the ball on his five-yard line, ran to midfield. A forward pass, Murrill to Bartlett, put the oval on the twenty-yard line, and Wicks, Walker, and Oliphant went the remaining distance to the goal line. Oliphant going over and kicking the goal.

When Urban blocked one of Vandegraff's punts a moment later, Fitzpatrick picked up the ball and ran twenty-five yards for a score. He also kicked the goal. Charley Brickley, himself, sent the collegians the game a moment before the end of the final period. He walked onto the gridiron to remonstrate with the officials over a decision. The collegians were promptly penalized fifteen yards, which put the ball on their two-yard line. Oliphant took it over for the score.

Races Fifty-five Yards for a Touchdown—Goal from Placement is Made by Keck.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 24.—The Princeton freshman football eleven, by a most spectacular and unexpected comeback, defeated Yale 1921 before 3,000 people in the Yale Bowl this afternoon by a score of 9 to 7. When the Tiger cubs were subdued, 24 to 0, by the Harvard freshmen three weeks ago the football critics set them down as second-raters. A week ago the Yale freshmen went to Cambridge and humbled Harvard 1921, 14 to 0, and today's gathering looked upon the Tiger cubs as easy meat for the Yale bulldog.

Before the game began the Yale freshies were offering six to one on their team. Throughout the game the visiting freshmen forced the play and five times approached so close to the Yale goal that a score was imminent. Twice their endeavors succeeded, once in the second period, when Harvey ran half the length of the field for a touchdown, and again in the fourth period, when Keck booted a placement goal from the forty-three-yard line.

Harvey Achieves Fame.

Harvey's run was spectacular. He snatched the ball from the ground after it had been put into play with a poor pass from Captain Acosta, the Yale centre. The ball slid off the fingers of Half Back French and Harvey snatched it up. He was tackled by Quarter Back Neville, but arose and shaking himself free, dashed into the open. The Yale pursuit was slow in getting under way, and Harvey leaped ahead of Lay and Dines, the Yale backfield players who trailed him until the goal line was reached.

Late in the first half, Princeton made her first threatening attack. Receiving the ball on a fumble at the Eli 25-yard line, Raymond and Opie smashed the Yale rush line for ten yards. Then the Tiger attack failed, and Keck tried a goal from placement on fourth down, which went outside the uprights.

Early in the first period Yale was momentarily dangerous, a forward pass, heaved by Lay to Dines, netting 30 yards and carrying the Elis to the Tiger 15-yard line. Opie intercepted the next forward pass, and Davis, the Princeton punter, booted the ball out of danger.

Yale Threatens to Score.

Late in the second period French of Yale attempted a drop kick from the 43-yard line, which fell far short. Yale wheeled its attack into position at the beginning of the third period for the only consistent ground gaining by the home players during the contest. Jim Neville recovered a fumble on the Princeton 25-yard line, and went through centre for 10 yards on the next play. French and Lay alternated in assaults at tackle till the Tiger 6-yard mark was reached, when Lay went through for Yale's only touchdown. French's goal placed Yale in the lead, 7 to 6, but the scene shifted in the fourth period, when a dashing run back of 30 yards by Raymond brought the fight again into Yale territory. Unable to gain, Princeton was forced to resort to a field goal, but Keck's placement trial was blocked. Brewster fell on the ball, and the campaign was still on Yale's territory.

Raymond ripped the Yale line open for a twenty-yard gain, and rushes by Opie and Penny swept the ball to the Yale five-yard line. Here a penalty for roughness set the Tigers back twenty yards. Welsh was called into the game for a drop kick, but his attempt went outside the goal posts. Punting against the wind, French of Yale lifted the ball barely to midfield, and shortly afterward came Keck's goal from placement, which sailed jauntily over the crossbar and won the game for the Princeton invaders.

Brandy Sends Ball Over Bar That Wins for Notre Dame.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Penn., Nov. 24.—Neither Washington and Jefferson nor Notre Dame played smart football in their first gridiron meeting here this afternoon, but the Westerners displayed a little more initiative and took advantage of the breaks, registering a victory by 3 to 0. Half Back Brandy, who was the star of the Notre Dame-Army game, booted his team to the long end of the score when he registered a placement goal in the third period from the 34-yard line.

Both teams showed a dogged defense and a poor running attack. Contrary to expectations, Notre Dame failed miserably at its forward passes, not completing a single one. W. and J., on the other hand, had the visitors frantic in the third period with a veritable flock of forward flings which gave two successive first downs and carried the ball into Notre Dame territory.

In the third period Bahan of Notre Dame carried the ball almost single-handed for three first downs, to the W. and J. 15-yard line, but here the Notre Dame attack melted before the local defense. Acting Captain Rydzewski of Notre Dame was put out for roughing in the second period and his team penalized half the distance to the goal.

SYRACUSE VICTOR IN WEST.

Michigan Aggies Defeated in Football Battle, 21 to 7.

Special to The New York Times.

LANSING, Mich., Nov. 24.—The Michigan Aggies today completed a season of unbroken defeats when they dropped the final game of the year to the University of Syracuse 21 to 7. The Aggies' defense crumpled before the battering-ram tactics of Meehan, Steele, and Brown. By unloosing a bewildering series of passes in the third period the Easterners scored an easy victory.

Until Steele shook off several tacklers and ran sixty yards for a touchdown in the last part of the first period the two teams appeared evenly matched. Most of the early playing was in mid-field, neither team seeming to have an advantage.

A series of plays from kick formation enabled the Aggies to put the ball within shooting distance of the Syracuse goal in the second quarter, and on a place-kick formation Archer forward-passed to Ramsey, who went over for a touchdown.

Swartzer put Syracuse in the lead in the third period when he recovered a fumble and raced seventy yards for a touchdown. Forward passes put the ball on the Aggies' twenty-yard line and M. Brown skirted the end for the third touchdown. Meehan missed a drop kick from the Aggies' forty-yard line by a few inches.

The lineup:

WEST VIRGINIA IS BUMPED.

Mountaineers Tumbled by Wesleyan Eleven to Tune of 20 to 0.

Special to The New York Times.

CLARKSBURG, W. Va., Nov. 24.—West Virginia got the biggest surprise of her season here today when she was beaten by West Virginia Wesleyan by the score of 20 to 0. West Virginia was overconfident, and was reckoned as an easy winner by at least three touchdowns before the game. Her hard game with Washington and Jefferson last Saturday, however, evidently was too much for her, and the team played listlessly, and with no fight.

Wesleyan, on the other hand, presented a well-drilled team that used the old-fashioned crisscross time after time with deadly effect. This old play figured conspicuously in every touchdown. Fisher, for Wesleyan, was the star of the combat. The game was played on a field covered with two inches of snow.

The lineup:

Wesleyan, (20.)	Position.	West Va., (0.)
Fisher	R. E.	Hager
Martz	R. T.	Harrick
Gill	R. G.	McCue

FORDHAM TRIUMPHS OVER NAVAL TEAM

Galligan Smashes Way Through Pelham Bay Reserves to 28 to 0 Victory.

MAROON ATTACK IS STRONG

Tars Unable to Check Early Advance of Winning Team—All Scores Made in First Half.

In a game marred by frequent fumbles, Fordham defeated the Naval Reserve team from the Pelham Bay Park training station on Fordham Field yesterday afternoon by a score of 28 to 0. The Bronxmen did all their scoring in the first two periods, and although they made good gains in the second half they lacked the punch or the steadiness to score. The visitors surprised Fordham and put up a much better fight than the score indicates.

One of the navy backs fumbled the opening kick-off and aided by Erwig's fine rushes, Fordham carried the ball to the one-yard line, where the visitors took the ball on downs. The Maroon machine, however, swung into action again, and a forward pass from Brennan to Dumoe put Fordham within scoring distance. On three plays Colletti plunged through for the first touchdown, and Dumoe kicked the goal.

In the same period Matty Golden recovered a Pelham fumble on the visitors' 20-yard line. Three drives at the front netted a first down, and then Golligan, who substituted for Erwig made a touchdown on a pretty end run, and Dumoe kicked the goal.

Shortly after the opening of the second quarter the tars again had some hard luck in the shape of another fumble, and Fordham recovered on the 30-yard line. Galligan and Brennan picked up twenty yards, and then Galligan tallied again from the 5-yard line.

The final touchdown came toward the end of the second period when the Fordham team marched down the field with a series of brilliant end runs. Dumoe kicked a rather difficult goal against a strong wind.

Both teams had opportunities to score in the third and fourth quarters. The Bronx men fumbled twice when scores were imminent and a penalty killed the hopes of the Naval Reserves. Collette intercepted a pass and ran seventy-five yards, but Fordham failed to tally.

In the fourth period the sailors surprised Fordham by uncorking a twenty-yard pass at midfield on the fourth down. Another pass was successfully worked and O'Boyle plunged through to the five-yard line. An offside penalty proved too much of a handicap and Fordham took the ball on downs.

The lineup:

Fordham, (28.)	Position.	U. S. Nav. R., (0.)
Fitzpatrick	L. E.	Johnston
Christiansen	L. T.	Griffen
Kendricks	L. G.	Cox
Golden	C.	Todorelli

INDIANS THREATEN PENN.

Carlisle Attack Strong, but Quaker Defense Stronger.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 24.—The University of Pennsylvania defeated the Carlisle Indians this afternoon by 26 to 0. Folwell's men had to work like trojans to keep the fleet redskins from crossing their goal line. Repeatedly the Indians threatened to score, once working the ball to Penn's three-yard line and again to the five-yard line, and barely missing two goals from placement.

Howard Berry was the individual star. He scored two touchdowns, kicked a field goal, and scored a goal from touchdown before his retirement in the first half. In the last half Light carried the ball over after a series of line plunges. The other Penn points were made by Quigley with a goal from placement.

The game was replete with spurts of brilliant work by the Indians when it was little expected. This alone made the game interesting as the heavier Penn line withstood the Indian attack whenever they tried line plunging.

FUMBLES BY GREEN HELP BROWN CAUSE

McDonough Muffs Punt and Providence Eleven Hurries to Touchdown as Result.

FINAL SCORE IS 13 TO 0

Second Tally Comes Through Failure of S. Holbrook to Hold Ball After Long Run.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Nov. 24.—Brown and Dartmouth, meeting for the first time since 1906, fought a desperate football battle on Braves' Field this afternoon, the Brunonians winning 13 to 0. Brown's two scores came at the beginning of the second half, and both were made possible because of Dartmouth backfield fumbles.

Earlier in the game Gordon of Brown had missed a drop kick goal from Dartmouth's forty-four-yard line, and Brown also had been held for downs within nine yards of the Hanover posts.

Dartmouth had its chances to score. Phillips missed two placement shots, one from the thirty-two-yard line and the other from the eighteen-yard line after Dartmouth, following a brilliant fifty-yard run by S. Holbrook, had been stopped ten yards from the goal line.

At the start of the second half McDonough muffed Gordon's long punt, and Albright fell on the ball for Brown on his opponents' fifteen-yard line. Brown here made two line gains, Dartmouth was off side, and on the next play Brooks shot through for a touchdown from the five-yard line.

The second touchdown was almost as quickly made as the first. Dartmouth received the kickoff, and S. Holbrook, after romping to his own forty-two-yard line, dropped the ball when tackled. Coulter, Brown's quarterback, got the ball, and then Brown started ahead again. This time the march to the goal was steady, eleven plays being needed.

After Brown's scores Dartmouth threatened eternally. In the third quarter the Green made a long advance to the Brown eight-yard line for a first down, but could not drive across, losing the ball on downs a foot from the goal. In the final quarter Dartmouth made a fifty-five-yard advance to Browns' twenty-five-yard line in eleven plays, a forward pass being intercepted. The same thing happened a few minutes later, after Brown lost the ball on a fumble on its twenty-yard line.

Toward the finish Dartmouth opened up a beautiful forward passing game, five passes netting eighty-six yards, but the final pass, made from the two-yard line, grounded. Dartmouth greatly outgained Brown. Brown completed three forward passes for thirty-one yards, and intercepted six of Dartmouth's passes for good returns. Dartmouth's rally was made possible by the splendid passing of S. Holbrook, and the catching of C. Holbrook, McDonough, and Durkee.

SWARTHMORE IS MERCILESS

Rolls Up a Score of 57 to 7 Against Haverford Eleven.

Special to The New York Times.

SWARTHMORE, Penn., Nov. 24.—The Swarthmore eleven defeated its old rival, Haverford, this afternoon by the score of 57 to 7. The game was more exciting than the one-sided score indicates, Haverford fighting hard during every minute of the game. But the light Scarlet and Black eleven could not withstand the slashing attack of the heavy Garnet backs.

Captain Ally Cornog competed in his las tgame for Swarthmore and ended his brilliant football record by playing the greatest game of his career. He skirted the ends, bucked the lines, and kicked in a manner that stamps him as one of the greatest players who ever wore the Garnet.

Three touchdowns, six goals from touchdown, and a field goal was the measure of his scoring, but this is only a small indication of the great all-round game which he played. Bill Durbin and Bill Stow, the freshman half backs, pressed their Captain closely for individual honors. Stow especially played a star game. He was a factor in almost every play until he was hurt late in the second half.

Captain Gilmour of Haverford was the shining light of his team. He fought hard to stem the tide of defeat, but was handicapped by his weaker teammates. Busby, the little quarter back, also played a sterling game for the defeated eleven.

The lineup:

EASY VICTORY FOR LEHIGH.

Lafayette Beaten in Annual Game by 78 to 0 Score.

Special to The New York Times.

BETHLEHEM, Penn., Nov. 24.—Lehigh smothered Lafayette today in the annual game, the score being 78 to 0. In running up this big score Lehigh made a record. Lafayette's line was weak, and Lehigh plowed through for big gains. Around the ends, Wysocki and Herrington tore off many 25-yard runs.

Lehigh also gave her opponents a dose of what perfect forward passing meant, for, several touchdowns were made in this manner. To make one of the Lehigh touchdowns it took but two plays. W. Maginnes ran Scott's kickoff back 55 yards, and Wysocki then shot a forward pass to Herrington, who skipped the remaining distance.

Lafayette made about three first downs during the game, and never came nearer than Lehigh's 35-yard line. Lafayette's team was in poor physical condition in contrast to that of the Brown and White.

The lineup and summary:

DARCY'S ESTATE $8,804.

Late Australian Boxer Not Wealthy, as Had Been Reported.

According to the latest Australian papers to arrive in this country, Les Darcy left an estate of the value of only $8,804. Letters of administration were granted to his father, Edward Darcy, a Maitland farmer. Included in the amount left by the famous boxer, $5,000 was represented by property. Darcy contended, when he arrived in America, that his object was to make enough to support his family and that he was going to the war. At the time he was rated as being worth from $50,000 to $100,000. It is evident that he did not accumulate the large sums that were credited to him.

BAN PUT ON AUTO RACES.

Governing Body Not to Grant Sanctions During War.

The contest board of the American Automobile Association, which governs automobile racing in this country, decided yesterday not to issue any more sanctions for motor contests during the period of war exigency. This practically means the abandoning of automobile racing until after the war, it was stated.

The sep was taken because of the Government's need of skilled mechanics. It was explained that there are more than 1,200 drivers and mechanics enrolled in the American Automobile Association who, now that the temptaion to race has been removed, will be available for war work. The resolution of the association putting the ban on racing will go into effect Jan. 1, when the rules of the contest board will be suspended, it was announced.

QUAKER HARRIERS CAPTURE LAURELS

Robertson's Charges Lead Cornell Harriers for Intercollegiate Championship.

DRESSER FINISHES FIRST

Moakley Produces Winner of Individual Honors, Who Covers Six-Mile Course in 33 Minutes.

For the fourth time in nineteen years the Cornell long-distance runners were beaten in the annual intercollegiate championship held at Van Cortlandt Park yesterday, the team honors falling to the University of Pennsylvania, with an aggregation of green runners that had been whipped into shape by Lawson Robertson, the former Irish-American A. C. coach, who now is in his second year at the Quaker college.

Though beaten for the team honors, Cornell has the satisfaction of supplying the individual winner in Ivan C. Dresser, a worthy successor to the many great long-distance runners turned out by Jack Moakley, and who completed the six-mile hill and dale course in the good time of 33 minutes. Pennsylvania's winning total was 38, while Cornell finished second with 55 points.

War conditions had lessened the interest in this annual event, but six colleges responded to the call in spite of many teams being shot to pieces by enlistment of athletes in the service. There was an innovation in the shape of a freshman championship, and this brought entirely new blood to the front. Syracuse put a great team of first year men into the task of covering half the distance negotiated by the seniors and the up-State division accounted for the team title with the remarkably low score of 33. As in the senior race the winning team failed to take first place in the contest, this honor being accounted for by Dennis O'Connell of Harvard, who finished the three miles in 16:12, and was about seventy-five yards in front of J. Simons, the first Syracuse man to finish. Harvard did not start a team in the senior event, but finished second to Syracuse in the freshman race with a total of 47 points.

Few See Contest.

There was only a small turnout to witness the running of the event for the second time over the Van Cortlandt course. Six colleges were represented in the main contest, but the College of the City of New York started only four men, which gave it no chance to figure in the team score, which requires the aggregate of five men. Yale had entered a team, but four of the men named by the New Haven university were detained to attend to their duties as members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, which left Yale without a team to start to the post.

Columbia made the best showing the local university has ever enjoyed in this arduous encounter, and finished in third place with 74 points, while the more fancied runners from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology had to be content with fourth place, and Dartmouth's quintet finished last of the five teams completing full scores.

Winners and losers alike praised the course as compared with the dangerous route that the contestants had been forced to travel a year ago at New Haven, where they had to negotiate West Rock, that many claimed caused them to risk injury to limbs. There was, however, a surprise in store for most of the competitors, because in the prevailing fashion the course had been camouflaged.

The entanglements, which had not been in evidence when Pennsylvania won over the course a week ago and when the Cornell men walked over it yesterday, had been included by a slight change of direction. The runners became mixed up in the wire and both Cornell and Pennsylvania complained afterward that two of their best runners had been delayed beyond all reason by their conflict with the wire fence.

Too much credit cannot be given to the individual performance of Ivan Dresser. From the time the men were sent on their way his position as leader was never endangered, and he strode along with a free, easy motion that made light of the stiff hills encountered on the journey. For the first turn of the course Dresser was followed at a respectful distance by G. P. Halfacre of the Massachusetts Institute, with Glover and McHale of Pennsylvania close on his heels.

Dresser Leads at Turn.

Dresser's superiority was apparent when he completed the first turn of the course and danced by the crowd more than 100 yards in front of Halfacre, with Glover and McHale running close together fifteen yards behind. The field was well spread out then, but indications of Pennsylvania's victory were furnished as the Red and Blue had the whole team of seven men in the first twenty-five runners.

Dresser started on the second lap with undiminished speed, and going up the hill by the golf links he increased his lead. The flitting runners could then be seen deploying over the hillside and all that could be noticed with certainty was that Dresser was gradually increasing the distance between himself and the plodders behind him. There was a long wait then while the field was hidden from view on the upper golf links, along Mosholu Parkway, and in the wood that borders the golf course.

Excitement on the hillside overlooking the parade grounds followed and then a shout went up emphasizing the completeness of Dresser's victory. Dresser raced down to the parade grounds and swept across the green sward before the next man was sighted. eH had lost his competitors in the final round, and as he crossed the finish line, Glover of Pennsylvania, the next man to appear had, but reached the level stretch approaching the finish. The Cornell man won by a furlong and wore a broad smile as he was surrounded by the faithful few Cornellians present to witness another Cornell individual victory.

Glover Comes Next.

Glover also had run a remarkable race in the last circuit, and, although outclassed by the Cornell crack, had passed Halfacre and helped to assure the victory of his college by taking second place, twenty-five yards in front of the New Englander. McHale came next with the second tally for Pennsylvania. He was twenty yards behind Halfacre and had a margin of seventy-five yards on McCarten of M. I. T. Alvery of Dartmouth finished sixth, and H. G. Larson of Columbia seventh in front of H. A. Price, another of the dependable Pennsylvania runners.

After Turner of Columbia had crossed the finishe line there was a desperate race in which Cummings of Pennsylvania finished at a sprinting gait to withstand the challenge of three Cornell men all bunched and trying to take tenth place away from him. Cummings beat the Ithacans out and the three Cornell men were pretty well exhausted when they tallied to make four to finish for Cornell. The team race ended in favor of Penn when Brooks crossed the line in fourteenth place, completing five men for the Quakers, while Cornell had only four men across the line.

MANUAL LOSES AT SOCCER.

Is Beaten by Evander Childs in P. S. A. L. Series by 2 to 1.

Evander Childs obtained the verdict in the high school soccer championship match with Manual Training High School of Brooklyn, yesterday, at the Prospect Park Parade Grounds, by the score of 2 goals to 1. The first half proved to be scoreless. Manual Training was the first team to score in the second half. Blest, the inside right on the Brooklyn team, took a pass from Ferlaino, his partner on the right wing, and found the net. Bruder, on a pass by Jordan, equalized, and Captain Bout of Evander Childs, following a determined rush and with the aid of MacDonald, shot the winning goal.

Morris High soccer players advanced in the P. S. A. L. championship yesterday by defeating Boys' High of Brooklyn by the score of 1 goal to 0, at Crotona Park. The goal which decided the game came in the first half, when D'Auria found the Boys' High net with a long shot. From then on the teams struggled in vain to score again.

MUCKROSS, AT ODDS OF 100 TO 1, WINS

Long Shot's Victory on Bowie Track Is Feature of a Day of Surprises.

BOWIE, Md., Nov. 24.—Surprises were frequent in the racing here today, the most startling coming near the end of the program when Mrs. E. Arlington's Muckross struggled home in the mile and a quarter race a winner at odds of 100 to 1. There was little reason for overlooking Muckross in a race of this distance because in a long race at Aqueduct he had finished second, and was only beaten a head by that good long distance racer, Little Nearer. The handicappers for once overlooked a bet, and with T. Rowan in the saddle Muckross managed to get home in front of F. J. Coleman's Greetings and E. T. Zolliecoffer's Christie, both of which were strongly supported by the large crowd that took advantage of the Saturday half holiday to see the races.

The Endurance Handicap, at a mile, was the feature of the day, with J. F. Sweeney's Hauberk the favorite on account of his recent winning performance. Hauberk was carrying 126 pounds, a trifle more weight than he can handle comfortably, and at the finish he had to be content with third place. W. A. Burtschell's Highland Lad, a consistent performer, was in the front flight all the way, and took the large end of the purse from W. M. Jeffords's Fenmouse.

R. F. Carman's Startling, which has been showing great form all through the Maryland campaign, scored his third victory in four starts in the Columbia Purse event, at six furlongs. Jimmy Butwell had the mount on Startling, and in a driving finish he managed to keep the Carman entry in front of S. Ross's Ultimatum until he was safely past the judges.

In the Bowie Juvenile Handicap, for two-year-olds, W. A. Brown's Fragonard turned the tables on Orlando of Havana, which beat him earlier in the week, and captured the big end of the purse.

The summaries.

TEST FOR SPRINT STARS.

Spencer and Kramer to Show Their Endurance in Cycle Race.

Arthur Spencer, the world's new sprint champion, and Frank Kramer, title holder for sixteen consecutive years, will be among the field of starters in the six-day cycle race at Madison Square Garden, beginning next Sunday night. And therein lies a story—the old champion and the new in the most severe test of a cyclist's stamina and grit and riding capabilities.

Arthur Spencer is twenty; Kramer is thirty-seven—yet they are the world's best short-distance riders. The six-day grind serves to bring out everything there is in a rider, but both of these stars entered the test in order to show their superiority over the long route also.

There is a striking similarity in the start of the careers of both Kramer and Spencer. Kramer had just passed the twenty-year mark when he came into possession of the championship, in 1901. For sixteen years in succession the reigned supreme. He outrode, outmanoeuvred, and outgamed such established stars as Walter Rutt, Jackie Clarke, Alfred Goullet, Joe Fogler, Floyd MacFarland, and a host of others in defense of his crown. Then a twenty-year-old boy defrauded him.

There is also a resemblance in the riding styles of Kramer and Spencer. They both grip their handles in the same fashion, and they get their winning "jumps" in the same way. The "jump," as Kramer explains it, is merely a matter of nerve, of outnerving an opponent. This can be taken as a candid confession that Spencer outnerved him in last Summer's championship meeting.

Spencer's rise in the cycling game has been rapid, and is an exact duplicate of the beginning of Kramer's career. Four years ago Spencer was a novice in Canada. Kramer also began cycling sixteen years. As in Kramer's case, Spencer failed to meet success at the very ontset, but this did not discourage him. A year later he won the amateur championship of the Dominion, and in the following two years annexed many honors.

Last year Spencer, accompanied by his older brother, Willie, invaded the amateur ranks at Newark, and made a surprising showing. He turned professional at the beginning of the 1917 campaign and soon established himself in the professional ranks. He defeated Kramer in four out of five one-mile match races, besides taking into camp such creditable performers as Goullet, Grenda, McNamara, Spears, and Verri.

Arthur Spencer will be teamed with his brother in the coming race, while Kramer's riding partner will be Oscar Egg, one of last year's winners. Thirteen other combinations will start, and the men are paired as follows:

Alfred Goullet and Freddy Hill, Eddie Root and Marcel Dupuy, Bob Spears and Francisco Verri, Bobby Walthour and Paul Suter, Alfred Grenda and Charles Piercey, Eddie Madden and Frank Corry, Clarence Carmen and George Wiley, Jake Magin and Willie Hanley, Percy Lawrence and Lloyd Thomas, Victor Linart and Mike Debates, Vincenzo Madonna and Tom Bello, Tom Smith and Fred Weber, and George Chapman and Willie Rager.

William H. Wellman, manager of the contest, is offering $16,000 in cash prizes, ranging from $3,000 for first place, to $500 for each of the last four of fifteen positions. Every team that finishes is assured of a prize.

There will be an hour sprint every afternoon, from 2:30 to 3:30, and in the evening there will be a two-hour sprint, from 8:30 to 10:30. A new track is being constructed. This is being built up to the arena boxes, which means a wider riding surface.

GOLFERS FROM HUB DOWN NEW YORKERS

Ouimet and Guilford Have Better of Kirkby and Anderson by Margin of 2 Up.

WINNERS GET LEAD EARLY

Finish Morning Round with Two-Hole Advantage—Englewood Player Performs Consistently.

In what may be his last appearance on any American links until after the war, Private Francis Ouimet of Camp Devens, paired with Jesse Guilford of Boston, defeated Oswald Kirkby of Englewood, metropolitan amauter champion, and John G. Anderson of Siwanoy, Westchester amateur champion, by 2 up in a thirty-six hole fourball bestball match at the Englewood Golf Club yesterday. The match was arranged to raise funds for the Camp Devens athletic fund and the Y. M. C. A. fund and attracted a big gallery for so raw a day. In the morning almost $200 was collected, and it was estimated that the total amount would be well over $500.

Ouimet may have lacked practice, but if he did he gave no noticeable sign of it. He was playing Englewood for the first time and although unaccustomed to the course he approximated 80 on his morning round and had a 76 in the afternoon. He was not his usual sensational self, but he supplied a steady brand of golf which produced results when results were needed. In all his local matches this season Ouimet has been able to rise to the occasion, and it was no different yesterday.

Kirkby, at home, played the best golf of the four. He approximated 76 in the morning and had a like card in the afternoon. At times Guilford drew applause by fine wooden shots and his putting was unusually good. Anderson was streaky. Several times he came to the rescue of his side with an efficient display of golf, and again he was fighting his way out of trouble.

After the morning eighteen holes, Ouimet and Guilford had a lead of 2 up, which they maintained to the end. Ouimet began the match spectacularly by winning the first hole in a birdie 3, thanks to a long putt which dropped into the cup.

Kirkby squared the match at the third with a 4, the result of perfect golf. At the seventh the Boston pair went ahead again when Ouimet produced another 3, but the first nine ended all square when Anderson got a 3 at the ninth. Coming in Ouimet had a 3 at the tenth to win that hole, and when both Anderson and Kirkby were in trouble at the eleventh the Boston pair became 2 up. Anderson won back a hole at the thirteenth and Kirkby squared the match again at the fifteenth. Trouble, however, beset the local pair again at the sixteenth and Ouimet's well-placed iron won him the eighteenth.

The first seven holes of the afternoon round were squared in par figures. Ouimet's 3 at the eighth gave his side a lead of 3 up on the match. The next five holes were halved, but the four-teenth Anderson asserted himself with a twenty-foot putt for a birdie 3 which won that hole. At the short fifteenth Kirkby holed out a long putt for a 2, but Ouimet equalized this effort with a putt of equal length which ran into the cup for a similar 2. Kirkby had a chance to win the seventeenth, which would have given his side a right of victory, but he missed a four-foot putt and the hole was halved. Kirkby won the seventeenth. At the eighteenth the players were forced to drive against a treacherous cross wind. Anderson and Kirkby each sliced into a trap. Ouimet place his tee shot on the green and won the hole easily with a 3. The best ball cards were:

BEAT CURTIS CHESS TEAM.

Morrie High Players Spring Surprise in School Tourney.

With the admission of Townsend Harris Hall into the Interborough High School Chess League, ten teams participated in the second round of the annual series of team matches at the Central Y. M. C. A. in Brooklyn, yesterday. The champion Boys' High team scored another victory, as did Commercial and Eastern District. Morris High, however, sprang a big surprise by defeating Curtis High, one of the winners of the first round, by 4 to 0. Stuyvesant and Townsend Harris Hall divided the points.

Columbia, Harvard, Yale, and Princeton plan to hold their annual intercollegiate chess tournament in New York on Dec. 20, 21, and 22, if these dates prove acceptable to all of the colleges. Meantime, the various chess squads are engaged in preliminary tournaments to decide the personnel of the teams to be sent here. Columbia, winner of last Christmas, is obtaining valuable practice in the series of the Metropolitan Chess League. C. B. Isaacson, S. A. Clapp, and D. E. Ehrlich are again in line for placea on the team.

In the first of the series of three entertainments at the rooms of the Brooklyn Institute Chess Club, next Saturday, H. Helms will play simultaneously against twenty-five to thirty opponents at as many different boards.

OHIO STATE HELD TO TIE.

Auburn Beats Back Attempts of Harley to Score.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 24.—Auburn today held the Western Conference champion football team of Ohio State University to a scoreless tie in a benefit game played before the Ohio National Guard Division at Camp Sheridan. Ohio was the aggressor throughout, but when their goal line was in danger the plainsmen beat back every assault.

Chick Harley, the visitors' star, twice had opportunities to achieve victory through field goals, but on both occasions his kicks were wide. Right Half Back Ducote for Auburn played almost as brilliantly as did Harley, and his great punting proved a factor in counteracting Ohio State's smashing drive.

SOCCER TITLE WON BY MONTCLAIR A. C.

Defeats Staten Island Eleven in Deciding Game by Score of 4 to 0.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., Nov. 24.—For the first time since the Field Club League of New York and New Jersey was organized in 1910, the soccer eleven of the Montclair Athletic Club captured the championship by defeating the team sent over by the Staten Island Cricket and Tennis Club in the deciding game by 4 goals to 0 here this afternoon.

By winning this game the Montclair A. C. wound up with a record of 4 matches won and two drawn in six played, with a total of 10 points, or 1 better than the record made by the exchamulon team of the Crescent A. C., which won four, lost one, and drew one.

Six minutes from he start Paterson, by placing a high shot over Markham's head, scored the first goal for Montclair. There was no further scoring until the second half, when Denby, from a corner kick, headed into the Staten Island net. Shortly after that Raetzer landed a low, raking shot. Winpenny made it four straight for the home team. O'Rourke and Van Lear played the best game for the short-handed Staten Island team.

The lineup:

Tars representing several of the British ships and who have been doing their for the allied nations in convoying American troops acros to France, took a turn at soccer football yesterday at Bay Ridge, where they were the guests of the Crescent Athletic Club, members of whose champion team took the field against the visitors. The tars put up a good game against the champions, but were defeated by 4 goals to 2.

Australian Swimmer Killed.

Another famous Australian athlete has made the great sacrifice, for, according to late reports from the European front, Cecil Healy was killed in a recent charge. At the time of his death Healy was an adjutant, having achieved an excellent record for bravery and resourcefulness under stress of severe fighting. Healy was one of the best of the Australian middle distance swimmers, and at the time of his death held several Antipodean records at distances ranging from 150 to 400 yards. At one time he possessed the world's record for 150 yards in open water, but his time was bettered by Duke Kahanamoku, the Hawaii expert.

"Best in the Long Run"

SEES BIG INCENTIVE TO TAKE JERUSALEM

H. Charles Woods Believes Moral Effect Would Be Great Among Mohammedan Peoples.

HARD BLOW TO GERMANY

Would Endanger Kaiser's Prestige In Great Territory Exploited Commercially.

The capture of Jerusalem will be as great in its moral effect as in its military value is the opinion of H. Charles Woods, F. R. G. S., English traveler and writer, who is now in this country to give a series of lectures on "War and Diplomacy in the Balkans" before the Lowell Institute. Mr. Woods is the author of "Washed By Four Seas," "The Danger Zone of Europe," and other works. He is well versed in affairs in the Near East. His knowledge of the Turks he gained by a stay of many months on several journeys to the Ottoman Empire. In 1909 he visited Adana and investigated the massacre of the Armenians.

"To understand the movement undertaken against Jerusalem, and to appreciate its importance," he said, "one must go back into recent history. This done and one will see that any blow against this Holy City is also an allied blow against Germany. Ever since the Kaiser came to his throne he has been infatuated with the desire of a German drive to the East, an attempt to dominate from Hamburg to Bagdad. For instance, in 1889 and again in 1895 he made visits to Turkey and really played the part of a royal carpet-bagger. On the second of these occasions he even went so far as to declare himself the friend of the Sultan and of all Mosiems, who have in consequence venerated him always. He appointed to that country his best Ambassador, Von Bieberstein, who well carried out the War Lord's intrigues until he was brought to London as Ambassador shortly before his death. The Kaiser lent German officers to train the Turkish army and German engineers to build her railroads.

"It is for these reasons that the interests of Turkey and Germany are so closely bound up that a defeat of the Ottoman Army is an actual defeat of the German Army. It is also for these reasons and because of the German obsession for domination in the Near East that Germany might even make great sacrifices elsewhere to realize her great penetration scheme across two continents.

"The Bagdad Railroad may be called the backbone of German power in Asiatic Turkey. Constructed as a prolongation of the Anatolian railways, which were opened as far as Konia in 1896, the Bagdad Railroad has been gradually constructed, as the result of a concession given to Germany in 1903. At the present time it is possible to start from Constantinople and travel by train right across the table land of Asia Minor, through the Taurus mountains, along the plain of Cilicia, through the Amanus range across the Euphrates and at last as far as Helif. This place lies about two-thirds of the way between the Euphrates and the Tigris. There the facilities for travel have only been available for the last few months, for while the Amanus tunnel was completed in 1915, the Taurus tunnels were only pierced last year. These additional travel facilities are most important as far as Mesopotamia is concerned, for there are now at most only 200 miles of distance which cannot be traveled either by train or by boats floated down the Tigris from Mosul.

"In regard to Syria these travel facilities are most important, for the great southern arm of the Bagdad Railroad leaves it near Aleppo and runs in a southernly direction through Damascus as far as a point called Deraia Junction. From this point the Hedjez Railroad continues south on the east of the River Jordan as far as Medina.

"The other line turns from Deraia first in a westward direction and then southward, passing between Jaffa and Jerusalem, and going as far as the Egyptian-Turko frontier.

"The military operations which have taken place in Southern Palestine are exceedingly important from a military point of view. As the British were obliged to push forward their defenses of Egypt to a line well east of the Suez Canal, it is obviously highly important that they establish these lines well to the east and northeast of the Sinai Peninsula and therefore beyond the desert area.

"Again, the capture of Jaffa and the occupation of the area beyond it places the British in a position to threaten, if not to cut, the Deraia-Jerusalem Railroad, and therefore to sever all communication with Jerusalem. The capture of Jerusalem would mean the taking of a place of great military importance, the occupation of a military centre, which, in this part of the Ottoman Empire, is second in importance to Damascus. With Jerusalem captured, the British would be in a position to easily advance across the Jordan to the Hedjez Railroad and, by cutting that line, sever all Turkish connection with Arabia. Their operations are of the utmost importance, for they would be in a better position to draw off and prevent the sending of reinforcements to Mesopotamia.

"Judging by my experience in Turkey and my acquaintance with the Turks, I think, too, that the moral effect of British successes in Palestine must be almost equal in significance with their military success. To begin with, British occupation of Jerusalem, following as it would the capture of Bagdad, cannot fail to have the very greatest effect on the mentality of the people who have always regarded these centres as the two most important in Asiatic Turkey. Moreover, though Moslems, of course, consider Mecca and Medina as their two most holy cities, Jerusalem is always considered as a sacred place, for the Mahommedans reverence Christ, Moses, and Abraham. The capture of Jerusalem would therefore have a considerable religious effect because one of the strongest claims of the Sultan of Turkey to the position of Caliph, or head of the Moslem religion, is due to the fact that he has always been the guardian of the three holy cities.

"The King of Hedjez is, so far as we know, in indisputed possession of Mecca and Medina, and therefore the loss of Jerusalem, which has been in Mohammedan hands since 1243, more than 200 years before the fall of Constantinople, would mean the loss of the last three holy places."

Mr. Woods said that he did not believe that Turkey was in a position to make a separate peace, as German dominations in the empire is so strong that she must keep going with Germany.

When Ahmed Djemal Pasha, now leading the Turkish army opposed to the British forces, was Governor of Adana, Mr. Woods used to visit him and discuss with him over innumerable cups of coffee the local and general situation in Turkey. He said he was favorably impressed with the Governor and his régime.

After Mr. Woods's trip to Boston he will make a tour of the country. This is his first visit to the United States.

Standard Oil Company of Louisiana Increases Stock to $10,000,000.

BATON ROUGE, La., Nov. 24.—The Standard Oil Company of Louisiana has filed with the Secretary of State papers increasing the corporation's capital stock from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000. The increase, Standard Oil Company officials stated, was largely to retire existing indebtedness.

The fee paid the State for doubling the stock was $2,500, said to be a record amount in Louisiana.

FOOD CROPS IN FRANCE WORST IN FIFTY YEARS

Country Depending Upon America for Soldiers to Release Workers for the Fields.

According to a statement recently made by the French Minister of Supply, this year's harvest in France has been the worst in fifty years. This has been due in part to the exceptionally severe weather last Winter, which did great damage to Autumn-sown crops, and even more largely to the disastrous Spring. Almost till the end of April continuous snow and frost prevented any adequate work being done in the fields, and the consequent rush that came in the last few weeks could not possibly be coped with by the laborers and their women folk still left on the land.

The decline in food output in France is made apparent by the following figures for the gross total production of wheat, maize, rye, barley, oats, potatoes and sugar beets:

	Bushels.
1914	1,057,000,000
1915	739,000,000
1916	793,000,000
1917	777,000,000

Discussing the shortage of labor, the Minister of Supply says: "Last year a slightly better season pulled the figures up somewhat, but the case is only too apparently one of deficiency in labor. Proportionately the recruitment of the French Army is much more largely from the land than in Great Britain, where the industrial centres, both under the volunteer system and the new service acts, have provided the bulk of the men for the army. Actually it is estimated by the Ministry of Agriculture that 8,000,000 people of both sexes—a fifth of the population—are employed on the land in France, and from their number at the time of the mobilization in 1914 3,000,000 of the best were taken. During the three years since that date the remnant, old men, unfit men, women and children, have had to carry on the work of this second line of national defense. They have worked heroically."

He believes that the only possible way to prevent an even worse state of affairs next year is to release from the army 750,000 men for the Winter and Spring plowing and sowing. "Their places," remarks the Minister, "it is hoped, will be taken by American troops, and in view of the decreasing tonnage the best service America can do this country at the present time is to give opportunity for the proper cultivation of its fields.

"It is estimated," he goes on to say, "that to make good the corn shortage 140,000,000 bushels will have to be imported, and advantage will of course be taken of the pooled system of purchase and transport worked through the Wheat Export Committee in New York."

As far as the civilian population is concerned, it is pointed out that things seem in some ways to have improved. Last winter coal rose to the exorbitant price of £10 a ton, and even at that price, when the Seine was frozen, it was difficult to get. This year every household has been provided with a coal card and, though the amount supplied is far from adequate, it may with the aid of wood be made to eke the winter out. Bread cards, giving an allowance of one pound per day per person, are being issued, while the quality has been improved. The third card-controlled item, sugar, has been reduced in allowance from 750 grams to 500 grams (about seventeen ounces) per month, a reduction which the Food Minister states will mean a saving of 150,000 tons, and a consequent available shipping space for 5,000,000 bushels of wheat.

THE COTTON MARKET.

Closing Session Is Strongest of the Week—Gains of 31 to 62 Points.

A week of strong and sustained price advances on the local cotton market came to a close yesterday with what was, perhaps, all things considered, the strongest session of the week. Prices advanced steadily throughout the short session on very strong trade buying, and the close was practically at the top, with the fourth new high record for the season made during the week in all the active months. The market was even broader and showed more sustained strength than on Friday, when part of the advance was due to short covering. December, for the first time in weeks, led the market, selling up within 30 points of the 30 cent level and closing at the top. The general list was up from 31 to 62 points.

The market opened at a decline of 2 points to an advance of 2 points, the irregularity being due to overnight selling orders, which were attributed to realizing attracted by the advance of Friday. These offerings were very quickly absorbed by the buying of brokers with Liverpool and domestic trade connections, however, and demand grew more general as prices worked higher. The absence of Southern selling attracted a good deal of attention as indicating continued firmness in the interior, and rumors of further British victories stimulated the demand later in the morning. January sold up to 28.90, or 38 points net higher, and later months showed net advances of 35 to 40 points. Closing prices were within 4 or 5 points of the best.

While the market seemed to derive its chief inspiration from the strength and activity of goods, and the disposition of manufacturers to hedge sales for forward delivery by purchases of futures, the advance was also promoted by small crop estimates. The Helena Board of Trade reported that crop estimates of sixty-four members averaged 10,575,000 bales, excluding linters. The annual estimate of The Commercial Appeal of Memphis was expected on Monday, and according to reports reaching here was likely to show a very small total. The Government's estimate of the crop is to be published on Dec. 11, and the market is evidently discounting an estimate of less than 11,000,000 bales, excluding linters. Manchester advices said that goods were in a strong position and reported a good demand from India.

BRITISH AND FRENCH GRIP ON SLACKERS

Text of Agreement Signed in Paris Shows Firmness of the New Policy.

SUGGESTED AS MODEL HERE

Draft Officials Hope Washington Will Start Move for Similar Understandings.

An agreement between Great Britain and France recognizing the liability to military service of British subjects in France and French citizens in British territory was signed in Paris in October. Copies of this agreement have just reached here from official sources, and the text indicates plainly how firm is the determination of both Governments to prevent slackers of either nationality, no matter where they may be, from escaping their military duties.

The agreement is in nine sections. Here is the text:

His Britannic Majesty's Government and the Government of the French Republic, being convinced that it is in the interest of their respective countries that, for the better prosecution of this present war, British subjects now residing in France and French citizens now residing in Great Britain shall either return to their own country to perform military service in its army or shall serve in the army of the country in which they remain, have concluded the following agreement:

ARTICLE 1.

Every male British subject in France who at the date of the signing of this agreement has attained the age of 18 and has not attained the age of 41, and who, if he were for the time being resident in Great Britain, would be liable for service in the British Army, and every male French citizen in Great Britain who, at the date of this agreement, has reached the age of 18 and has not reached the age of 41, and who, being liable by the law of France to serve in the French Army, has been summoned by the competent French authority to present himself for service in France, shall either return to his own country or shall become liable for service in the army of the country in which he remains.

Provided that no male British subject in France between the ages of 18 and 41 and no male French citizen in Great Britain between the ages of 18 and 41 shall be regarded by the French Government and the British Government, respectively, as excepted from the operation of this article on the ground of non-liability to military service by law of his own country unless he holds a certificate of such non-liability issued to him by or on behalf of the British Ambassador in Paris and the French Ambassador in London, respectively.

ARTICLE 2.

For the purposes of this agreement persons possessing both French and British nationality shall be considered as possessing exclusively the nationality of the country in which they are at the date of this agreement.

ARTICLE 3.

The British Ambassador in Paris and the French Ambassador in London shall be respectively entitled in any special case to issue a certificate of exemption to a British subject remaining in France and a French citizen remaining in Great Britain from liability to military service in that country.

ARTICLE 4.

The holder either of a certificate of non-liability given under the proviso to Article 1, or of a special certificate of exemption given under Article 3 who does not elect to return to his own country shall not be required to serve in the army of the country in which he remains.

ARTICLE 5.

Every male British subject in France between the ages of 18 and 41 who has not left France for Great Britain within thirty days after the date of the Order in Council enforcing this agreement in Great Britain and who does not hold either a certificate of non-liability given under the proviso to Article 1, or a special certificate of exemption given under Article 3 hereof, and every male French citizen in Great Britain who, at the date of the Order in Council applying this agreement in Great Britain and who does not hold either a certificate of non-liability given under the proviso to Article 1 or a special certificate of exemption given under Article 3 hereof, shall become liable, on the expiration of this period, to serve in the French or British Army respectively.

Neither the French Government nor the British Government shall be under any obligation to pay the expenses of the return of a British subject from France to Great Britain or of a French citizen from Great Britain to France, but opportunities shall be given by the competent authorities to every British subject in France and every French citizen in Great Britain who may wish to return to his own country in accordance with the provisions of Article 1 of this agreement.

ARTICLE 6.

This agreement shall not apply to any French citizen in Great Britain who came to Great Britain after the 1st of August, 1914, or who at a subsequent date deserted from the French Army after service with the colors, and His Majesty's Government will, at the request of the French Government, use every lawful means to secure that any such persons shall forthwith return to France.

ARTICLE 7.

The French Government may take such steps as are necessary by law to secure that any British subject in France who under the terms of this agreement becomes liable to serve in the French Army shall so serve, and the British Government may take such steps as are necessary by law to secure that any French citizen in Great Britain who under the terms of this agreement becomes liable to serve in the British Army shall so serve.

Provided that any subject or citizen of either contracting party liable under the terms of this agreement to serve or serving in the army of the other contracting party shall be treated in regard to conditions of service, pay, allowance, pensions, rights of exemption on medical or other grounds, medical re-examination, and discharge, in all respects in the same manner as a subject or citizen of the county in which he is for the time being resident.

ARTICLE 8.

This agreement shall also apply to any male British subject in France and to any male French citizen in Great Britain who, being under the age of 18 at the date of the agreement, attains the age of 18 during the continuance of the war, with the modification that in any such case liability to serve in the French or British Army, respectively, shall not arise till thirty days after the attainment of the age of 18.

ARTICLE 9.

The liability to military service in the French Army imposed on British subjects under this agreement, and the liability to military service in the British Army imposed on French citizens under this agreement, shall cease upon the determination of the present war.

In faith whereof the undersigned, duly authorized to that effect by their respective Governments, have signed the present agreement and have affixed thereto their seals.

Done at Paris in duplicate, this 4th day of October, 1917.

RIBOT.

Officials charged with the administration of the selective draft law of the United States hope that an agreement along similar lines to the Franco-British agreement will be entered into between the United States and Entente nations, which would render subject to the American law thousands of the subjects and citizens of the allied nations now resident in this country. The agreement, if entered into, it is stated, will affect only those nationals of the allied countries who are of the legal draft age—that is, men between 21 and 31 years of age. Roger B. Wood, Draft Director for New York City, is one of the officials in favor of an arrangement which will make possible the drafting of foreigners other than Germans living in this country.

SALESMEN'S EARNINGS

in most specialty lines ought to be based directly on the results produced. That is the only arrangement fair to every one. It is the only arrangement which gives a capable man a chance to make as big an income as he is worth.

The members of our sales staff receive liberal commissions, which are paid promptly when contracts are closed. Their earnings vary from $2,000 to $10,000 a year. One man who joined us in October made $648 in his first four weeks. With longer experience he will do a great deal better. Ours is a permanent organization of high-grade, well-paid representatives, whom we regard as our partners in building up this business.

Some of the other features that make a connection with this company so attractive to able men are:

The sales work is intensely interesting, partly from its unusual nature and partly because it is carried on exclusively among progressive business concerns and business men.

The demand for our service is steady in good times and in bad; it has been intensified by war-time conditions.

The organization is expanding rapidly; hence there are unusual opportunities to work quickly into district managerships and other executive positions.

The unit of sale varies from as low as $30 to several thousands of dollars, thus giving ample scope for developing and using each man's selling ability.

If you have confidence in your own brains and resourcefulness; if you really know how to sell; if you have a broad understanding of present-day business methods; if you have a clean record of hard work and accomplishment; then—and only then—will we be interested in negotiating with you. Just now we have places for a few men of the type just described. They will be open until the first week in January; but it would be best for you to write promptly if you wish to learn more about this opportunity.

Your letter should recount briefly your experience and selling record. It will be held in strict confidence; and if it seems mutually desirable, we will gladly send you in return full information as to our company and will arrange for a personal interview. J 120 Times.

WHO KNOWS YOU?

How is it that articles of every-day use are the most extensively advertised? For the same reason that unadvertised articles are a drug on the market.

It does not cost a fortune to get results from advertising; some of the present-day national advertisers began on an appropriation of a few dollars, some of the largest accounts handled by this organization began by spending less than $100.

If you have an article of merit or a proposition that will stand strictest investigation, tell us about it. We have helped others, why not you?

If out of town, send full particulars; prompt and careful consideration will be given—or make an appointment and come and see us. RUDOLPH GUENTHER, INC., Advertising Agents and Builders of Business, 25 BROAD STREET, N. Y. PHONE 266 BROAD.

QUEENS TO HAVE BETTER TRANSIT

Plans for a New Extension of Elevated Line to Flushing Are Being Drawn.

GROWTH OF POPULATION

Refusal of Interborough to Operate Over Leased Tracks Will Not Prevent Progress.

The refusal of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company to equip or to operate a rapid transit line over trackage rights leased from the Long Island Railroad Company has caused the engineers of the Public Service Commission to hasten the work of preparing plans and contracts for the extension of the elevated line now ending at Corona to Main Street, Flushing.

It was the original purpose of the commission to extend the line to Little Neck and Whitestone Landing, but the refusal of the Interborough has stopped this plan for the present.

The distance from Corona to Flushing is about one and three-quarters miles, and to build a double-track elevated structure and equip it will cost about $1,750,000. Of this cost the city will have to pay for everything except the equipment, and the question of getting the money for the improvement may prove a very difficult one.

While the Public Service Commission cannot compel the Interborough Company to operate trains over a leased line, it can be compelled to operate lines built and owned by the city. One of the reasons given by the company for refusing to consider at this time the operation of trains was the great cost of material, the difficulty of getting it, and enough labor to carry on the work.

At present a great many thousands in Queens have no other means of getting about except by using the trolley lines and the Long Island Railroad. The need of the extension has been felt for a long time, and the lack of it will be felt more keenly as time goes on because of the rapid growth of Queens Borough.

In 1875 the population of what is now the borough was only 83,000. How it grew to its present population of about 400,000 is shown by the figures. In 1900 the population was 152,999; 1905, 198,000; 1910, 284,000, and 1915, 396,000.

The rapid growth began when it became known early in 1913 that the borough was to benefit by the dual system of rapid transit. Then began an increase in population and in realty values that has steadily continued. Speaking of the rapid transit matter to the Queens Chamber of Commerce at Flushing, Public Service Commissioner Whitney said:

"You are particularly interested in the subject of transportation in Queens, and especially in the Third Ward. You have all of the Liberty Avenue, Astoria, and Corona lines in operation and the major part of Jamaica Avenue. You had hopes that the Corona line would be extended by track connections to Little Neck and Whitestone Landing. This great section deserves inclusion in the dual system.

"The commission laid out a route extending the Corona line through Amity Street and other streets in Bayside. That route was, after much difficulty, fully legalized. Four years ago the members of the Board of Estimate pledged themselves to the extent of $1,000,000 to extend the line from Corona to Main Street. Shortly thereafter the suggestion appeared that trackage rights be secured by lease to operate over the Long Island tracks. It is unnecessary to relate the steps taken to reduce the railroad's terms from a rental of $250,000 per year with 7 per cent. interest on all capital expenditures to $125,000 for the first year, with 6 per cent. compounded annually until the tenth year, when it would reach $211,000 with 5 per cent. expenditures, not including grade crossing cost.

"In the meantime legislation had been secured authorizing such a lease. Requests were made by the subcommittee of the commission to inform the public of the terms and conditions under discussion. Two considerations were important—first, to secure the assent of the operating companies the commission had so to draft the contract that all deficits from operation should fall on the city and not on the companies, and, second, that the rentals to the Long Island Railroad should be as low as possible. To the end that the city's deficits should be at a minimum, the people of the section readily and almost unanimously agreed to a 10-cent fare.

The commission believed that by the obligation of deficits the companies could operate the new lines, and after a conference last Spring between Commissioner Hodge and President Shonts of the Interborough Company, the commission felt assured that that company would operate.

"Yet after the commission had completed a form of contract except as to points of detail still undetermined, and after the necessary legal public hearing, the Interborough Company informed the commission that it would not operate the lines at this time. This ends any present possibility of operation over leased tracks. You are all familiar, even in greater detail, with these facts. It is now important to consider the next step.

"Immediately upon receiving the answer of the Interborough Company the commission directed its Chief Engineer and Chief of Rapid Transit to prepare plans and contracts for the extension of the Corona line to Main Street, Flushing, in order that rapid transit too long deferred for this promising community might be no longer delayed. The commision thoroughly believes in an extension into and through Flushing just as far as money will allow. If we can build the first section we will be nearer to the construction of the second section. The Interborough can refuse to operate an extension leased by the city, but it cannot refuse to operate an extension built by the city. Under the contract it can be ordered to operate it.

"When the plans are completed and bids secured the contract will be submitted to the Board of Estimate for its approval. The Borough President of Queens may be depended upon to be vigilant for the necessary money.

"Such an extension to Main Street will bring the Corona line from the further side of a swamp to a community of 30,000 to 40,000 people of great potential development possibilities. Flushing needs rapid transit even more than Mount Vernon and Yonkers."

AWARDS FOR BUILDINGS.

Fifth Avenue Association Encourages Fine Architectural Work.

Awards for the best building construction during the past year in the Fifth Avenue district were announced at the annual dinner of the Fifth Avenue Association last week.

Harris and Maurice Mandelbaum, builders of the sixteen-story Postal Life Building at 511 Fifth Avenue, southeast corner of Forty-third Street, which figured in a series of interesting sales before it came into the possession of the Postal Life, received a gold medal for the finest example of new construction. York & Sawyer designed this building.

The Guaranty Trust Company received second prize in this division for its building at Madison Avenue and Fiftieth Street, designed by Cross & Cross.

The gold medal for altered buildings went to Cartier, jewelers, for their new building at the southeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Fifty-second Street, and the silver medal to the Union Trust Company at Fifth Avenue and Thirty-eighth Street. W. W. Bossworth and Theodore C. Visscher, respectively, made the plans for these alterations. In each instance the architect received a diploma.

Sale of Scarsdale Show Place.

William J. Brainard bought for investment, from Eugene J. Lang, an architect, his property in Morris Lane, Scarsdale, consisting of a large Italian villa and garage, on about three acres of land. It is considered one of the show places in the section.

This property is at present under a five-year lease, with nearly four years to run, to Leonard A. Cohn, a New York broker. R. Kenneth MacLea negotiated the sale. The same broker recently sold ten acres of the Morris farm to Mr. Brainard, on which he is constructing a mansion for his own occupancy.

STANDS BY TEACHERS FOR JOINT CONTROL

Professor John Dewey of Columbia Discusses Controversies with Trustees.

PUBLIC THE FINAL ARBITER

Quotes Dr. Schurman of Cornell in Support of His Views — Calls Struggle an Unheroic One.

Until members of the teaching staff of educational institutions obtain a voice in the control of institutions "the calling of promotion of intelligence in the nation remains unassured, precarious, and imperfectly responsible," is the conclusion reached by John Dewey, Professor of Philosophy at Columbia University, in an article on "The Case of the Professor and the Public Interest," contributed to The Dial of Chicago.

While nothing is more desirable than that the change should come about by a voluntary handing down of authority on the part of its legal possessors, meaning the Trustees, Professor Dewey says, he hastens to add that if wisdom is lacking in high places to effect the change by voluntary abdication then the question which the teaching body will have to face is how far is it willing to become a body of place holders and technical specialists immune from interference because it speaks in tongues not understood by the public.

Although writing of the question as it affects the college teacher, Professor Dewey declares that the issue affects the entire teaching body of all the schools.

"The spread of the movement to federate public school teachers with trade unions cannot be understood, except as a part of this larger issue," he continues. "That portion of the public which deplores the fact that teachers resort to industrial unions for defense and support assumes, beyond all others, an obligation to recognize the concern of the public in the struggle of teachers to have a more responsible voice in the conduct of their work.

Public Must Settle the Issue.

"In the end, it is the public, not the teachers or their legal employers and regulators, whether in the university or in other schools, which will determine the settlement of the issue. It is not too much to say that the final issue is how much the American people care about the integrity and responsibility of the intellectual life of the nation."

In beginning his article, Professor Dewey remarks that newspaper comment on late academic events in the University of Minnesota and Columbia University reveals even more clearly than usual the split between the prevailing attitude inside and outside the university walls.

"To the general public practically every academic issue which gets on the 'front page' is one of freedom of teaching and speech," he continues. "Reactions are condemnatory of administrative action if the editorial writer or the voluntary correspondent feels that there is danger of inquiry and discussion being stifled, especially if a vivid imagination sees universities being choked to death in the grip of capitalistic overlords. They are laudatory on equal general principles if the writer feels that teachers in universities are running amuck with political and theological radicalism or even are trying to enlighten their students as to the drift of modern radical thought instead of confining themselves to inculcating well established orthodoxies of interpretation.

"One rarely finds the body of college teachers much excited about the free-speech issue. What it is concerned about is usually questions of procedure, which ultimately turn upon the relative authority to be exercised by the trustees as legal employers and guardians and the Faculty as representing immediate educational interests. The case of the Faculty has never been better stated than by President Schurman of Cornell University apropos of the resignation of Professor Beard. President Schurman said:

"'The American professor is apt to chafe at being under a Board of Trustees, which in his most critical mood he feels to be alien to the republic of science and letters. Even in his kindliest moods he cannot think the board representative of the university. The university is an intellectual organization and the American professor wants the government of the university to conform to that essential fact. His indictment of the existing form of government is that it sets up and maintains an alien ideal, the ideal of a business corporation engaging professors as employes and controlling them by means of an absolute and irresponsible authority.'

Combat Not Heroic.

"The professor's attitue is not so sensational as that of the public. It is less heroic than that of popular radicalism, which demands the thrill of combat, the plot of the oppressing villain, and the martyrdom of the oppressed victim. It turns largely on formal and technical questions, questions of procedure—as may be seen in the report of the Association of American Professors on the case of Scott Nearing at the University of Pennsylvania.

"There is a popular image of the association rushing to his rescue out of sympathy with radical views. As a matter of fact, the condemnation of the Pennsylvania authorities was based essentially on prosaic details of failure to define grounds, failure to allow a hearing, upon details of time and method of dismissal, with presentment of collateral evidence that these irregularities of procedure were due to unacknowledged objections to the tenor of his economic doctrines. This case affords a reasonably fair symbol of the usual situation.

"President Schurman stated the gist of the thing when he said that to the teacher the university is an intellectual organization, and that he wants the actual government of the university to conform to this fundamental fact. If anything lifts the effort of the teaching body from an attempt to advance personal and class prerogatives up to that of a public interest, it is, of course, just this fact. If security and responsibility of intellectual organization are worth anything to the nation, then the professors' efforts to get a responsible share in college control form a public service."

SURFACE LINES LOST HEAVILY BY STRIKE

Statistics Show Failure to Regain Traffic Diverted During Disturbance.

COST PUT AT $5,000,000

City's Gain in Fares Paid During the Year Estimated at 20,075,011.

A statement just prepared by Dr. A. F. Weber, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics and Accounts of the Public Service Commission, says that the strike on the surface lines in August and September, 1916, resulted in a loss of traffic to those lines aggregating 100,000,000 passengers, which is equivalent to a money loss of $5,000,000. Because of the fact that these passengers have formed the habit of traveling in the subways or on the elevated lines, explains partly the great congestion on these two systems. In other words, if the strike had not driven so many of the former patrons of the surface lines to adopt other ways of getting about those lines would have reaped their share in the growth of the city's transportation business.

Dr. Weber says that, despite the loss to the surface lines, the traffic generally has shown an increase of 20,075,611 passengers for the year ended June 30, 1917. Besides carrying those who formerly patronized the surface lines, the subway and elevated roads have also been compelled to transport their share of this increase in traffic. A good deal of the increased travel is due, of course, to the opening and the extension of new rapid transit lines, but just what percentage of the increase can be traced to these sources is not set forth.

The gain in traffic in the year cited was the smallest in any one year in the last seventeen, except 1915, when the traffic showed an actual decrease of 5,500,000 passengers. This loss was attributed to the depressed business conditions which prevailed in the closing months of 1914. In 1916 the traffic increase amounted to 91,102,889, or nearly four and one-half times that of the last fiscal year, and was exceeded only by the figures showing increases in 1905 and 1910.

In seventeen years passenger traffic in the city has increased more than 1,000,000,000. The figures for 1900 show that on the elevated and surface lines there were carried 846,353,058 passengers. The first subway was not placed in operation until 1904. In 1917 the total traffic was 1,918,812,226. This table shows the traffic figures year by year, together with the increases:

1901	881,344,801	34,991,743
1902	938,989,964	57,645,163
1903	1,000,767,483	61,777,519

1907	1,325,381,388	63,540,213
1908	1,358,000,407	42,619,019
1909	1,402,417,642	44,417,235
1910	1,531,262,914	128,845,272

1915	1,807,632,726	*5,571,630
1916	1,898,735,615	91,102,889

*Decrease.

An interesting feature of the figures is that they show a greater increase in travel than in population. In 1860, for instance, the average fares paid for local travel by a citizen during the year was only 43, and in 1917 the fares increased to 353. This table shows the increase:

1870	103	1905	283
1880	152	1910	321
1890	218	1917	353

The largest single item of growth is represented by traffic in the first subway and its new extensions operated by the Interborough Rapid Transit Company, which showed a growth of 42,688,674 for the year, with the Interborough elevated lines coming next with an increase of 37,133,297. Elevated and subway lines operated by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company showed a total increase of 19,417,243. Just what increase on the Interborough lines is due to the new lines and extensions is not known, but it is estimated that it is about 19,000,000.

For the purpose of showing his reason for the statement that the strike on the surface lines was responsible for their loss of traffic, Dr. Weber said that during the year in which the strike occurred the surface lines in Brooklyn and Richmond Boroughs, which were unaffected by it, made substantial gains. The gain in Brooklyn amounted to nearly 9,500,000 passengers. Taking up the subject of decreases the statement says that the largest single decrease in surface traffic was in the Borough of Manhattan, where the loss amounted to 77,585,733. In the Bronx the loss was 13,287,710, and in Queens, exclusive of the B. R. T. lines, the loss was 3,260,722.

All of the companies operating surface lines have applied to the commission for authority to increase their fares either by charging 6 cents or by charging 2 cents for transfers. Nothing appears in Dr. Weber's statement as to the reason for the present compilation, but it is likely due to a desire of the commission to have the precise facts before it when the hearings on the applications are resumed a week from tomorrow. The Brooklyn and Richmond lines which made substantial gains in traffic joined with the less fortunate companies in asking for permission to increase their fares. Dr. Weber's table closes with this comparative summary, which gives the statistics of travel in both 1916 and 1917; the decreases are indicated by the letter D:

In reply to a published query as to how much of the increased earnings of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company went to the company's employes in increased wages, President Shonts of the company prepared a statement which is published in the current number of the Interborough Bulletin. He says that during the last fiscal year the increase in the company's earnings amounted to $3,991,098.55 and that the payrolls increased $1,967,000.

Among other increases which ate up the increased income, leaving only $172,061.53 of the increase for the stockholders, were increases in operating expenses, $2,575,121.21; increase in taxes, $529,778.19; cost of constructing its share of new subways and of elevated extensions, and equipment, $675,927.

NASSAU DEVELOPMENT.

New Plans Broached for Causeways Would Help Values.

Real estate owners in Nassau County are interested in recent shore-front developments affecting properties in the southern sections of the county.

In conformity with the State and national project to build a main channel through the confluent bays on the south side of Long Island a lateral channel 300 feet wide is being dredged at Baldwin Harbor and near the shore at the point where Milburn River and Hempstead Bay meet. About 100 acres of shore front at Baldwin Harbor are being developed for improvement with bungalows and dwellings next Spring. The waterway improvement is being made by private interests, but it is expected to redound to the advantage of the general public.

Of interest to residents in Nassau County is the plan just broached to build a causeway across Hempstead Bay from Baldwin Harbor to the easterly part of Long Beach, thereby making that extensive ocean front accessible to and from the mainland. The plan is to have several openings and bridges in the causeway so as not to interfere with navigation. It is sought to have the causeway terminate at the Long Beach summer home colony, known as Nassau-by-the-Sea. This section of the beach is but slightly developed and is accessible now only by sail and motor boats and a small ferry. A trolley road from Baldwin Harbor over a causeway to Long Beach would, it is said, add at least $1,000,000 to the taxable assets of the township of Hempstead.

Abandonment of Contract.

The general rule, where performance of a contract to convey is due and the vendor refuses to perform it, or fails to perform on being duly requested to do so, is that the vendee may, if he chooses, treat such breach as an abandonment and termination of the contract and may then abandon it himself, and, the contract having thus come to an end, he may sue at law to recover what he has paid, in an action for money had and received; for, the contract being at an end, the vendor holds money of the vendee to which he has no right, and to repay which, therefore, the law implies his promise. Where the contract is divisible and separate, so that a full performance of one part may be made by both parties without affecting the subsequent performance, or right of performance, as to the remainder, and a breach of that character occurs as to a part thus separable, the rule above stated must be also applicable with regard to the money paid by the vendee upon such separate part.—San Diego Const. Co. v. Mannix, (Cal.) 166 Pac. 325.

Opens New Station.

The Interborough Rapid Transit Company has notified the Public Service Commission that it has opened for service the new station at 151st Street and Eighth Avenue on the Sixth and Ninth Avenue elevated railroad line. This station was constructed under an order issued by the commission in November, 1915, following the receipt of a petition from the Upper Harlem Elevated Station Committee and other citizens in the neighborhood.

A Plain Statement Of Facts

WAR TIMES at the beginning of our Civil War Real Estate could not be sold. A few years later it had increased tremendously in value and large profits were made. Real estate is now at the bottom. It cannot go any lower. Experience shows that this is the time to buy.

TRAFFIC CENTERS like Broadway at 34th St., 42d St. and 59th St. have always become the most valuable property. Broadway, 230th and 231st Sts., is the centre and distributing point for all traffic to and from points north of Manhattan.

REAL ESTATE MUST RISE—Owing to the War the Government is distributing tremendous amounts of money. Labor, commodities of all kinds, rents, etc., have gone up. Real Estate must do the same. That's horse sense.

THE CITY'S GROWTH is steadily and rapidly northward along Broadway, particularly around subway stations and traffic centres such as Broadway, 230th and 231st Streets. A hasty glance shows this to be the case.

BROADWAY—Say you own a lot on Broadway and they will know the location in Berlin, London, Paris, anywhere in the world. At auction sales of Broadway property downtown, the prices brought seem absurd as compared to present values.

TIME TO BUY—Every business man knows that the time to buy is when nobody wnats what is offered.

THE SUPREME COURT HAS DECREED that these 234 lots on Broadway, 230th, 231st Streets, must be sold at an auction sale next Tuesday. With the Liberty Loan in course of payment; securities at a low ebb; the war just beginning; we know this property cannot be sold unless it is sacrificed. We advised that this sale be postponed, but it could not be done. These lots have got to be sold if we have to give them away.

WE HAVE ADVERTISED all these facts. In spite of this, the public does not care to buy property at the present time. We have had only a few inquiries for maps. No interest has been shown in the sale.

Therefore, in our opinion
It is a wonderful opportunity
For people who have a little money
And faith in the future
To buy a few lots
At this legal, unprotected and unreserved auction sale
And in a few years, if history repeats itself,
As it always does,
The Lots will show a tremendous rise in value.

—From the N. Y. Times.

The City Has Caught Up With Itself

"After ten years of inactivity it is time to sit up and take notice. Population has continued to increase steadily at the rate of about 150,000 a year; business especially since 1914 has expanded to unprecedented figures. Meanwhile building has been much curtailed and there has been so little buying of land that prices have remained about stationary.

"The first to wake up to the new situation will be the ones to pick up the bargains and to reap the biggest increases of price when the real buying begins."

Your Opportunity

Owner is forced to sell New York City business property of proven earning capacity. Price at which property is offered represents large loss to present owner, but permits purchaser to make excellent return on investment. Building is store and six lofts on 25 ft. lot in excellent uptown wholesale district. Fully rented on good leases. Building economical in operation, requiring but one employe. Mortgage 5% does not mature until 1921. A bargain and conservative investment requiring but $10,000 cash to purchase. Suitable second mortgage can be arranged. Income and expenses as now rented are approximately as follows:

Income $8,000.

Expenses

Wages	$572.00
Fuel and Supplies, avge.	250.00
Lighting and Power, avge.	250.00
Repairs	314.36
Miscellaneous	12.50
Insurance, est.	250.00

LEADING REALTY INTERESTS IN MANHATTAN ORGANIZE TO REVIVE INVESTMENT ACTIVITY IN REAL ESTATE

A Campaign of Education Planned to Inform Both the Large and Small Investor Regarding the Unusual Opportunities Existing in the Present Market—Prices at Very Low Ebb Despite Encouraging Influences That Are Gradually Clarifying the Generally Depressed Condition.

"Buy Real Estate Now" will be the slogan in one of the most important campaigns ever undertaken by real estate interests in New York.

Its purpose will be the inauguration of a comprehensive and systematic movement to bring back into the market both the large and small investor in real estate.

To this end a Committee of Forty has been tentatively organized, including among its members leaders in every phase of real estate activity in this city.

At two meetings already held plans have been formulated for the campaign of education to place before the consideration of the investing public the remarkable opportunities that make this the psychological time for the profitable acquisition of highly desirable income producing properties.

Real estate men interested in the movement who are members of the Committee of Forty were enthusiastic over the possibilities of the campaign and made clear their indorsement of the plan.

"The brokers, operators, savings banks, title and insurance companies representative of the tremendous real estate interests in the greatest city of its age have realized that a radical readjustment in the sentiment toward real estate as an investment is absolutely necessary," said Lawrence B. Elliman of Pease & Elliman, who is Chairman of the committee.

"This body of men, which I believe to be one of the most representative ever united to strive for a common realty cause, has for its purpose the determination of what can be done to restore confidence in real estate. We seek to establish beyond any question, through a systematic and comprehensive campaign of education, the intrinsic and fundamental desirability of this form of investment."

The basis upon which real estate values in New York rest, its tremendous resources and economic prestige, its supremacy in the markets of the world, its natural growth coincident with the expansion that must result from its position as the business hub of the nation, the unprecedented renting season that has absorbed practically all available space and created a demand greater than the supply, the fundamental stability of real estate as an investment under any and all conditions, and, lastly, the present prevailing low prices of real estate holdings, all have combined toward making the present the most opportune time to attract new capital to this form of investment.

The concentration of railroad terminals, the warehouse and storage facilities, the importance of New York as a manufacturing centre, (about one-tenth of the entire manufactures of the United States are produced in this city,) the fact that imported goods are here sold to the trade, and that foreign shipments are largely financed through its banks—all have played their part in making New York America's greatest shipping centre.

New York is the financial centre of the country, having far more banks and larger bank deposits than any other city; its Clearing House transactions surpass those of every other community in the United States.

Prior to 1914, approximately one-half of all the merchandise entering and leaving the United States passed through New York Harbor. The concentration of shipping at this port is due to the natural advantages of its wonderful harbor. New York's commercial supremacy is graphically illustrated by the chart compiled by the Merchants' Association, and reproduced herewith.

As a manufacturing centre the city is also pre-eminent. It contains, according to a survey made by the Merchants' Association, actually within its limits more than 29,000 manufacturing establishments, and these in addition to the numerous plants which surround it but lie outside of the municipal boundaries.

Nearly 600,000 are employed and more than $350,000,000 is paid out annually in wages, while goods valued at $2,293,000,000 are produced each year. Not only does New York occupy the position of the leading manufacturing centre in the United States, but that lead is increasing at an average of 700 new factories a year, operating within its limits.

Other factors contribute toward supporting the contention that the future of New York real estate is imbued with practically unlimited possibilities.

The steadily increasing population, which adds a million to the city's inhabitants every seven years, has led to the prediction by the New York Telephone Company that in 1940 it would be serving users in a city of 11,500,000, of which number 3,400,000 will be in Manhattan.

The comprehensive chain of new rapid-transit systems is nearing completion and will open up vast new areas for residential development. Not only will the outlying districts be blessed with all the benefits that these additional means of communication must afford, but the older sections of the city will also share in its beneficent effects.

Moreover, steady progress is being made to eliminate the various deterrents that have been operating to discourage the purchase of real estate in this city.

Pressure is being brought to bear upon the institutions loaning upon real estate who have adopted extreme conservative financing methods within recent months to change their attitude. One of the first big moves of the Committee of Forty will be to bring to the attention of the lenders careful analyses of the existing conditions, in the hope that they will readjust their viewpoints.

The fear of undesirable and injurious legislation—another bugaboo reacting against real estate—is being eliminated by the ceaseless activity of the leading real estate bodies, which have not only watched carefully the work of the State and City Governments, but have also steadily pounded into the Governmental authorities the need for relief from the burdens real estate has been asked to shoulder.

The movements against overregulation, overassessment, and overtaxation have stimulated the agitation for new sources of revenue and equalization of the State tax, creating a real hope that in the near future certain and effective measures of relief will be obtained.

The promiscuous growth of the city has been checked for all time by the zoning law, which will make it impossible for equities to be destroyed by the invasion of undesirable occupancies in streets whose character has already been established.

All these deterrents have combined toward creating a more or less pessimistic attitude on the part of buyers, and have been to a large degree responsible for the decline in favor of real estate for investment purposes.

The aim of the Committee of Forty, therefore, to combat this state of mind by a carefully planned campaign of education, strikes at what many consider to be the crux of the entire situation, namely, the psychological pessimism that prevails.

Laurence McGuire, President of the Real Estate Board, said:

"Though not generally understood, it is nevertheless a fact that real estate in the City of New York at the present time is enjoying unusual prosperity. To the owner who has recently been called upon to reduce or replace his mortgage this will seem an extreme statement. But it is an accurate one. Prosperity in real estate is not to be measured in any sense by the mortgage market. It is true at times when mortgage money is easy to procure at low rates that the market is active, but active in a speculative sense.

"The true measure of prosperity is the rental derived from improved properties and the resultant demand, either actual or potential, for unimproved or vacant property. There is comparatively little untenanted space throughout the city. Average rentals are good. The net returned from improved properties while somewhat out of proportion to the gross is nevertheless in most instances greater than it was last year, and surely greater than in pre-war years.

"The coming administration has pledged itself to an economical program and has in addition pledged itself to seek new sources of revenue to be applied to the ever-increasing cost of municipal and State government. If the administration will adhere to these pledges, and there is no reason to suppose it will not, the future for real estate is promising.

"With the greatly increased Federal tax on incomes, there is no doubt but that some enjoying large incomes will seek investment even in unproductive property. There will be a large demand for these properties when the world returns to normal conditions; and when buildings can be erected under such conditions.

"One is frequently asked: 'When will real estate come into its own or become active again?' In my opinion the only answer is: 'When the war is won.' Every interest must at this time be subordinated to the necessity of winning the war and every individual must put his full force and strength back of the Government in this great task. That the war must and will be won none of us has any doubt whatever."

"There are three paramount reasons why real estate investors should regard the present as an advantageous time to invest," said Argyll R. Parsons of Douglas L. Elliman & Co.

"First, because prices are the lowest they have been in years, and the time to buy is when you can buy cheaply.

"Second, because most of the conditions which produced low prices have been removed and a constructive policy substituted for a destructive one. For example, the absence of any policy in the past permitted buildings, irrespective of height, area, or use, to be erected, frequently causing irreparable damage to abutting owners.

"This has been displaced by the zoning ordinance which restricts the height, area, and use in the erection and occupancy of buildings to those sections, where, by virtue of natural tendencies, the development appears logical and unobjectionable. This simultaneously with the removal of a great menace, has created an improved situation that permanently stabilizes and appreciates all Manhattan values.

"Third, rents are higher than they have been in years and the demand, greater now than the supply, will continue to increase disproportionately owing to the suspension in all building construction.

"In the light of the circumstances we cannot well miss a big business revival, and it is difficult to understand why certain of the heads of financial institutions should seek this time to knock real estate which is recognized to be in a sound and strategical condition. It is time their attitude was changed and hearty support accorded to that form of security which is the very basis of revenue for the maintenance of our Governments, and, in fact, of all securities."

"A negative but nevertheless powerful argument supporting the acquisition of real estate for investment purposes is its steadiness in a declining market," declared Joseph P. Day. "Even although decreases have been recorded in the values of properties in many sections of the city, the changes have been gradual and have extended over an extended period. There has been no sudden and unexpected collapse, with the almost overnight resultant destruction of equities.

"This element in real estate ownership has tended to open the eyes of a great number of people to the stability of this form of investment. It has served to centralize attention on real estate in spite of the vicissitudes of recent years which it has been required to sustain.

"All that is needed is a careful campaign of education and encouragement before the ever-increasing army of investors will be slowly won back into the fold."

"When I say that now is the time to buy real estate," declared J. Clarence Davies, "my conviction is based, not on a cursory analysis of conditions or the experience of a few years in the real estate business, but on mature deliberations based upon a lifetime of study.

"Not since 1907 has the time been more advantageous to buy. Prices are at bedrock, in a paradoxical situation where renting is at its apex. The history of New York real estate for 100 years back has demonstrated that money is made just at such times. Confidence is slowly being regained and as it increases steadily in intensity the timidity of capital will proportionately vanish.

"The fundamental principle that land is the basis of everything, and that our entire economic structure rests upon its foundations, is one that can never, even in the most critical periods, be either minimized or disregarded.

"The inexorable economic law of supply and demand prevails today with all its old-time power. We have in New York, a greater demand for both residential and business space than the supply is able to meet. Now is the time to buy."

"Since the very essence of any investment is its good income return and the reasonable certainty that such income return will continue to be derived without injury to the principal, I feel that the time has come when the public should be informed as to what extent real estate meets these requirements," said Bryan L. Kennelly.

"Innumerable properties in New York have been placed upon a lucrative basis, by virtue of the remarkable renting period we have passed through and which has absorbed practically all available space in buildings regardless of character or location. Realty well located and income-productive has every essential of an ideal investment. Its attractiveness is at this time even further enhanced by the splendid rental conditions now prevailing."

"Buy real estate!" urged Frederick Fox. "Since it is increasingly apparent that to acquire real estate in any part of the world except through fair and reasonable barter is a dangerous proceeding, it only becomes necessary to determine when and where to buy. The City of New York has the indorsement of over 5,000,000 people in its appraisal of real estate values. This is a guarantee for the present and a promise for the future no other city in the United States can offer.

"The fairest land in all the world has no actual value without a community of people to indorse estimates of its value. For many years banks and financial institutions in every country of the globe have advised and practiced the investment of surplus cash in mortgages based upon New York City real estate. When selling prices have about reached the level of these mortgages, it must be the time to buy and profit."

Frank Lord of the Cross & Brown Company said: "The investing public has learned the lesson taught by repeated and enormous losses in stocks and bonds that the time to invest is not when ideal conditions, big earnings and dividends have served to inflate the price of securities and to enable the astute operator to unload on the cautious public.'

"Today an educated Wall Street public buys during times of stress and sells when affairs look rather too favorable. Wall Street has the advantage of real estate in that the ticker usually tells the truth, while in the realty world it has been largely the fashion to hide the truth, if possible, or dress it so that it cannot be recognized or seems to be something else.

"A recent sale of a large downtown property was dressed up at about $3,000,000, which was nearly two-thirds of the whole truth, and this is as near as the average real estate man is expected to approach the truth.

"When the clever real estate man thinks it is not safe to tell two-thirds of the truth he says that the assessed valuation of the property is so and so, hoping that this figure will stick in the public mind as the value or the sales price and that a sufficient fog will be thrown around the matter to befuddle everybody but his knowing self.

"A little less candor of this sort will give the investor a better opinion of real estate and of the kind of men who represent it in the Empire City."

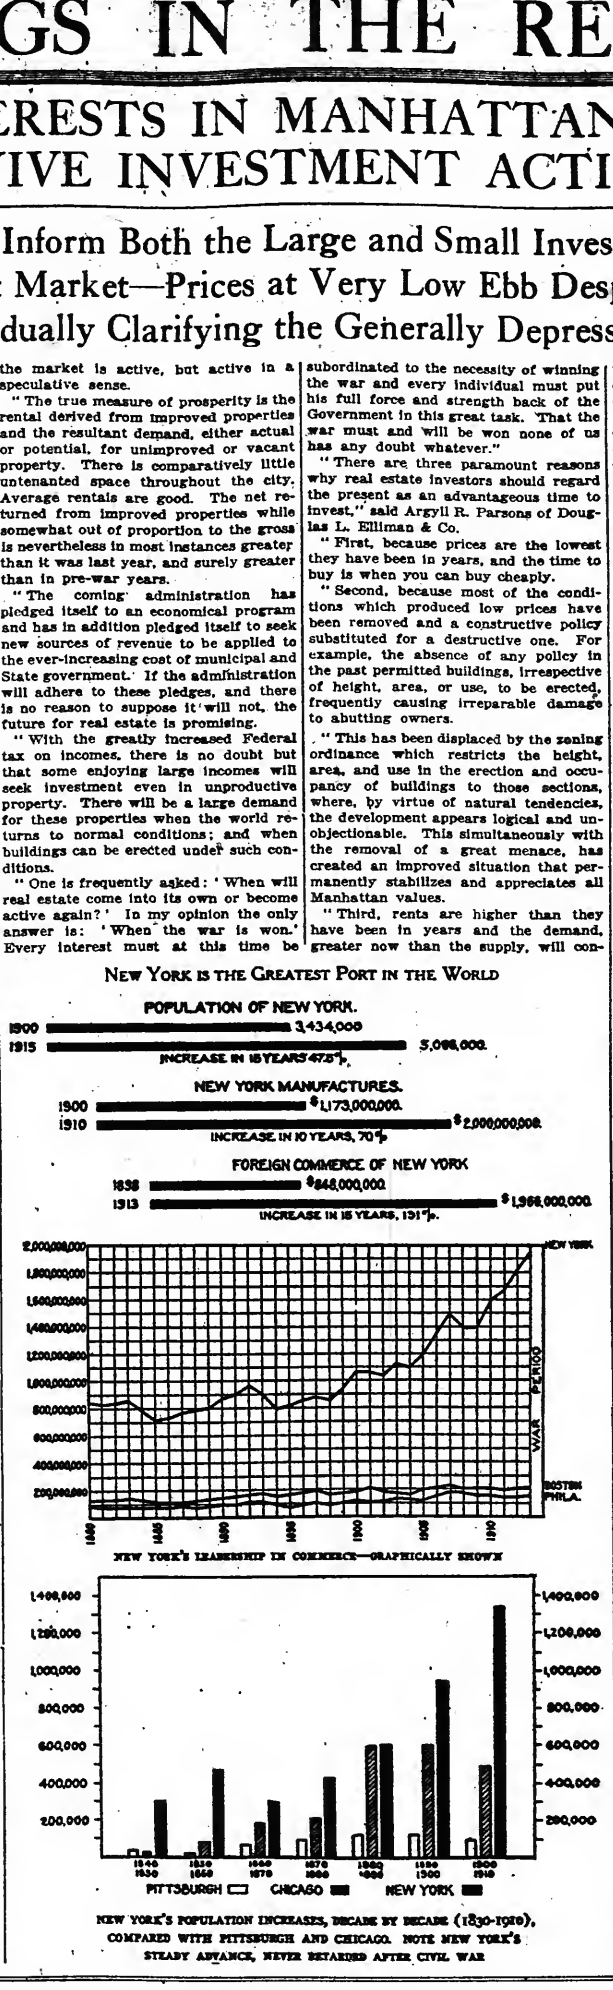
Charles F. Noyes said: "For the first time in twenty years I see strong indications that real estate interests, including brokers, agents, owners, title companies, &c., are getting together to protect and advance the interests of real estate. It is well that this should be done, and the time is propitious for strict co-operation between those interested in realty.

"It is believed that this will bear fruit in the near future. Most real estate men believe that the advantages of real estate ownership should be presented to the public in a more forceful manner than has been done heretofore.

"With rents in New York City increasing from 15 per cent. to 25 per cent.; with promised relief as far as over-inspection and over-regulation of buildings are concerned; with the absolute certainty that money is always available for real estate mortgages at a much lower rate of interest than is exacted in financing industrial corporations and railroad properties; with the positive knowledge that the City of New York is increasing at the rate of over 200,000 in population each year, and that housing facilities must be provided each year for 40,000 new families, it is pointed out that a campaign of publicity which will bring these facts before the people is certain to stimulate interest in what many believe the one best investment commodity in the world; viz, Manhattan real estate.

"Real estate prices are low. We have passed through the period of readjustment, and at these levels it is believed by real estate men that real estate is the best investment that can be had; and it is hoped that a campaign of publicity will bring these facts to the attention of all investors."

NEW YORK IS THE GREATEST PORT IN THE WORLD



REVIEW OF REAL ESTATE MARKET

Auction Sale of Fish Estate Holdings Productive of Interesting Results.

NEW MOVEMENT LAUNCHED

Moderate Demand Maintained for Small Investment Holdings—Leasing Branch of Market Quiet.

The outstanding feature of the real estate market last week was the disposition of sixty-two parcels of Manhattan realty for a total aggregating more than $400,000 less than the estimate of value placed upon them by the city for the purposes of taxation. The sale at auction of practically all the holdings of the Fisk Estate after an uninterrupted ownership extending over a period of more than 200 years, in a market conceded to be unusually dull, brought out several interesting characteristics in the prevailing situation.

In the first place the neglected condition of the realty, a good deal of which was untenanted and productive of practically no income return, caused considerable skepticism regarding the outcome of the sale. In the second place, the properties were located in sections which have apparently lost their popularity since the uptown trend of business began to depopulate the old-time established business centres.

To all intents and purposes the time was not propitious for the offering of holdings of this type in the present market. The predictions of the pessimists were rudely shattered when one of the shrewdest operators in the city paid $8,500 for a vacant lot in Suffolk Street. The fact that this was about one-half of the assessed valuation did not detract from the significance of this, the very first sale, since it demonstrated that confidence remained in New York real estate despite the discouraging clouds that have been hovering over the market.

As the sale progressed it became apparent that there are plenty of buyers ready to invest in this form of security. Adjoining owners and new purchasers figured in the sale, which proved two things at least—that there was still a market for real estate, at a price, and that perhaps there was need for the revision of assessments on many properties in the older sections of the city.

Another important development potent with possibilities for restoring confidence in realty was the inauguration of the movement to educate the public regarding present opportunities for good investment. While the real campaign has not yet been launched it may develop into one of the most important moves of its kind. The character and the standing of the men behind it, and the interest which they are displaying, encourage the hope that their object will be attained.

The realty situation otherwise remained substantially unchanged. A moderate demand was manifested for residential properties in various sections, especially apartment houses in the Bronx. On both the east and west sides of Manhattan a number of private dwellings also passed into new ownerships.

The leasing branch of the market was quiet, and reflected few new developments. Most of the business concerned commercial space, the supply of which continues steadily to diminish.

Mercantile Establishments.

A booth, six square feet, in an amusement park for the sale of chewing gum, and, presumably, candy, cigars, and similar articles, is held to be a mercantile establishment within the meaning of the labor law defining a mercantile establishment as "any place where goods, wares, or merchandise are offered for sale."

ARCHITECTS' REGISTRATION.

Operation of New Law Raises Architectural Standards.

The second annual report of the Board of Examiners and Registration of Architects shows that it has held 25 meetings during its second year. Total applications received during the two years number 1,991.

Of those 175 were withdrawn, 1,367 have been approved and 358 disapproved with the recommendation that they be not certified without examination.

The report says in part: "The Board of Examiners, after two years' experience with the operation of the registration law, and after examining the work of scores and hundreds of architects who are not a credit to their profession, is confirmed in its belief that the most important function of the registration law is its tendency to raise the standard of education and technical qualifications.

"The registration law does not prevent engineers and others doing building work, but it does forbid any new practitioner assuming the title of 'architect' until permission is granted for reasons which, in effect, make 'architect' a degree and the certificate a diploma of achievement.

"The law does not in any way compel the public to patronize architects, except as it may command respect by fixing high standards of ability and qualifications for those permitted to use the title. Your board believes that it has evidence of a strong impulse toward higher education on the part of young men ambitious to practice, and, with the assistance of architectural schools willing to co-operate with the board, has confidence that the law will justify its beneficent purpose."

Apartment House for Panama.

What will be by far the largest apartment house, as well as the largest building in Colon, Panama, is about to be erected. This building of two stories will have a frontage of 147 feet and a depth of 169 feet. There will be in all 128 rooms, so arranged as to be rented singly or in suite of from two to six rooms each. The building will have 24 toilet rooms, 32 bathrooms, and 34 kitchens. The cost is estimated to be about $75,000, according to a report of United States Consul J. D. Dreher at Colon.

MANUFACTURERS MOVING FROM RESTRICTED ZONE

The Save New York Committee said yesterday that the following manufacturing firms of cloaks, suits, furs, dresses, and waists have made leases outside the zone, or have established their manufacturing plants outside the zone, retaining their former lofts for offices and salesroom purposes only: Wellington Kay Company, Inc., dresses and costumes, 106 West Thirty-second Street, removed to Seventh Avenue and Thirtieth Street; Shamroth & Markheim, furs, 130 West Thirty-second Street, removed to 114 West Twenty-seventh Street; Leiserson & Rosenberg, Inc., dresses, waists, 1 East Thirty-third Street, removed to Madison Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street; L. Eidenberg, coats, suits, 12 East Thirty-third Street, given up manufacturing, retains present space for office, show room, also shipping department; F. & L. Manufacturing Company, skirts, 152 West Thirty-fourth Street, intends to give up manufacturing and retain loft for office, show, and stock room; Kohn & Baer, furs, 43 West Thirty-third Street, removed to 116 West Thirty-second Street, factory in West Thirty-first Street, same building; W. Steinberg, cloaks, suits, 35 West Thirty-fifth Street, removed to downtown; M. Schwartz, coats, suits, 60 West Thirty-fifth Street, removed to 22 West Thirty-second Street; J. M. Spar Company, dresses, 35 West Thirty-sixth Street, given up manufacturing, only office and show room; Schwartz & Fein, Inc., coats, suits, 53 West Thirty-sixth Street, given up manufacturing, loft for office, show room, and stock room; Weitman Brothers, coats, suits, 53 West Thirty-sixth Street, removed to 22 West Thirty-second Street; Herzig & Rappaport, coats, suits, 53 West Thirty-sixth Street, removed to 30 West Twenty-sixth Street; Leading Dress and Costume Company, dresses, costumes, 65 West Thirty-sixth Street, removed to 132 East Twenty-third Street; Peries & Gilbert, dresses, waists, 141 West Thirty-sixth Street, removed to 15 East Thirty-second Street; Newport Costume Company, costumes, 7 West Thirty-seventh Street, removed to 105 Madison Avenue; Rudolph & Co., suits, 8 West Thirty-seventh Street, office and show room only, factory in Bronx; Willner Frères, coats and suits, 13 West Thirty-ninth Street, removed to Brooklyn; Joseph Durst, Inc., suits, 1,330 Broadway, show room only, also stock and shipping rooms, factory in Brooklyn.

J. H. Burton, Chairman of the committee, said: "A great many of these lofts made vacant by removals are being filled with other industries, among which the millinery, flower, and feather trades predominate.

"It is very gratifying to know that the real estate brokers are using their influence to help the manufacturers remove from the Save New York Zone, and decline to make any new leases in the zone to manufacturers of the industries above mentioned.

"The Save New York Committee will continue its work until all the manufacturers have removed from the zone and it becomes an assured fact that the section of New York City known as the Save New York Zone is forever protected against becoming a factory centre.

"There will be a great many more removals of manufacturers from the zone, and we will announce these removals and their new locations."

HISTORIC GODWIN ESTATE TO GO TO HIGHEST BIDDER

Considering the campaign of education just started by Manhattan realty men to place before the public the unusual investment opportunities now existing in the real estate field, there is much speculation as to what the Godwin estate will bring when offered at public auction by Joseph P. Day and J. Clarence Davies on Tuesday next in the Vesey Street Salesroom.

The general opinion is that they will bring a figure far under their assessed valuation despite the fact that it is located on both sides of Broadway in the best section of Kingsbridge.

A map of the Godwin estate really shows more than 6,000 feet of frontage in improved thoroughfares, that is, in those that are curbed, flagged, and paved, and that have water, gas, sewers, and electricity installed.

The city assesses that 6,000 feet frontage on a valuation of about $825,000, or at the rate of $3,530 for each of the 234 lots contained in the tract as a whole, without allowing for Godwin Terrace, Kimberly Place, Putnam Place, and Verveelen Place, all of which are newly added 50 and 60 foot streets, in which, however, the improvements yet are to be installed.

The opening of these streets has given to the property 1,700 feet of additional lot frontage and another 1,295 feet and ten newly created corners, so that the total frontage in improved and unimproved streets to be disposed of next Tuesday is closer to 9,000 feet than 6,000 feet. That solution of two difficult "deep-block" problems in the future will add considerably to the city's assessment valuations and will do a great deal to hasten the development of some of the best property included in the tract.

Had the new streets been opened and improved in time for the Assessors this year, and valued by them, even as low as $60 a front foot average throughout, their valuation for 1918, then, would have been nearer $1,000,000 than $825,000, giving each lot an average valuation of $4,270.

That difference in valuation is accounted for by the fact that this year almost 40 per cent. of the property was valued by the city as interior plottage or as the rear end of unusually deep lots having but one outlet.

The order of the Supreme Court to sell the estate made it necessary to open up the new streets, as nobody nowadays wants city lots 180 to more than 250 feet in depth, with the result that some very fine building sites have been created out of land that formerly was only fit for use as an estate, which is just what the great block from 230th to 231st Street, Broadway to Kingsbridge Avenue, has been the last hundred years or more, or ever since it was a portion of the Macomb-Godwin apple orchard.

Marble Hill, lying just to the south of the Godwin estate, is a splendid example of an old estate divided, improved, and built upon. That property, which today consists of 441 lots, was bought many years ago by Godwin & McLean for $12,500.

About twenty-five years ago Hugh Camp paid $280,000 for the "Hill" as a whole. The total assessed value of the 441 lots into which Marble Hill is divided is $1,628,900, front foot values ranging between $100 and $380 in each block frontage and the average lot value being $3,920.

NEW FIRE ALARM RULING

The Board of Standards and Appeals has announced that a public hearing will be held Thursday, Dec. 6, on the following additional rule to the present interior fire alarm rules:

"Sprinklered Buildings, Sources of Water Supply. In the enforcement of the provisions of §83-a, labor law, with respect to fire alarm signal systems and fire drills, automatic sprinkler systems shall be deemed to have two adequate sources of water supply within the meaning of said section, if the system is a two-source system as defined in the Rules of the Board of Standards and Appeals for Fire Extinguishing Appliances, or when the system is equipped with and supplied by either a gravity tank or a pressure tank and a fire department connection."

WEST SIDE OWNERS MEET.

Oppose the Projected Removal of Encroachments.

The Central Park West Civic League went on record at its meeting in the Hotel Majestic on Thursday night as opposed to the removal of the car tracks on Central Park West and advocated the slicing off of the sidewalk on the east side of the thoroughfare to provide the necessary space for traffic.

Louis Steckler pointed out that the proposed plan for the removal of the encroachments on the west side of the avenue, now improved with high-class apartment houses, would work excessive hardship on the property owners, who in some cases would have to expend as much as $40,000 on a single frontage. Addresses were also made by Copeland Townsend, Frank B. Vrooman, and Dr. J. Gardiner Smith of the Harlem Board of Commerce.

Other improvements suggested were bus transportation on Central Park West similar to that on Fifth Avenue from Fifty-ninth Street to 110th Street; a subway station at or near 104th Street and Central Park West, and transverse bus lines through Central Park at Sixty-seventh, Seventy-ninth, and Ninety-seventh Streets; to advocate the beautifying of streets leading to Central Park; to conduct an educational campaign to prevent the littering of surrounding streets and avenues; to encourage the appointment of a Traffic Commission to direct and control vehicular and pedestrian traffic and to reduce fire risks and insurance rates.

The officers elected for the following year were: Copeland Townsend, President; Louis Stern, First Vice President; Charles W. West, Second Vice President; A. F. Osborn, Treasurer; Edward W. Forrest, Secretary; Thomas F. Brennan, Chairman Executive Committee; Louis Steckler, counsel, and Hugh McAtamney, Executive Secretary.

Talk on Fuel Problem.

The Hon. Cyrus C. Miller, former Borough President of the Bronx and at present serving as Bronx County Fuel Administrator, is to make an address on the problems connected with the coal supply situation and other matters pertaining to his office at a meeting of the Bronx Board of Trade to be held in the board rooms, 137th Street and Third Avenue, next Wednesday evening, Nov. 28.

STEEL MILLS READY TO RUSH SHIP PLATES

Expect to Turn Out 1,100,000 Tons for the Four Months Ending with February.

8,000,000 TONS IN A YEAR

Also Preparing to Turn Out 200,000 Shells a Month for Our Army Despite Big Foreign Orders.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 24.—Despite the larger amount of merchant shipping expected to be turned out by the extreme standardization of designs, the steel industry expects to be able to meet all the plate and structural shape requirements. While 750,000 tons of shipping was turned out by the United States in 1916, about 1,100,000 tons is expected for the four months ending next February, and by that time a rate of 500,000 tons of shipping a month is expected, this to be increased to a rate of 8,000,000 tons a year within a year.

In 1916 the entire output of sheared plates, ¼-inch and heavier, was about 1,800,000 tons, including a little tonnage that would not be suitable for shipbuilding, but within a few months the capacity for ship plates is expected to reach 300,000 tons a month, through the completion of new plate mills, of which the Liberty mill at Homestead, put in operation last month, is a specimen.

Orders for shell steel, chiefly in the form of forging billets, are being placed rapidly, and within a few months the output probably will exceed 200,000 tons a month, in addition to the shell steel for export. All the factories in the United States engaged at any time in the past in shell manufacture are to be employed, while additional plants are being placed in Canada.

The steel market is moderately active, and there is heavy buying of tin plates and sheets for the first half of next year, while in other commodities the transactions are usually limited to shorter periods of delivery. There has been a further loosening up in materials offered for early deliveries, and there is less difficulty in buying materials for early deliveries at the set price. The chief concern of the iron and steel industry at present is the shortage of coke, which has been accentuated during the past fortnight. Most of the railroad divisions are badly congested, and while the supply of empties to coke ovens has been 5 to 10 per cent. less in the last two weeks than formerly, the receipts at furnaces have been reduced by a greater margin, as the congestion has caused coke in transit to accumulate.

The steel market is working smoothly, and there are increased offerings of finished rolled steel products and of manufactures of steel, at the various prices recently set. Manufacturers have voluntarily revised contracts to the set basis because they knew it was the only way in which they could obtain orders, but in the case of rolled steel products there has been little revision of contracts.

Refuse Orders for Forward Deliveries.

The trade is talking about the proposed curtailment that the Government is to effect in unessential industrial activities, but at present there is only conjecture and no knowledge of where or how it will strike, so that the majority of steel mills are backward in making sales for forward delivery. Government orders for steel in various forms are being placed in larger tonnages than a few weeks ago, and, of course, the war program has become correspondingly more formidable as to the curtailment it will effect in steel supplies for ordinary commercial consumption. Sales of steel products for export are being made without regard to the set prices when the material is not to be used, directly or indirectly, for prosecuting the war, and export permits are being granted with considerable freedom, even plates being involved in some instances.

Pig iron is growing more scarce every week, many of the furnaces losing considerable time through the lack of coke, so that, on the whole, the production is materially reduced. There is a constant inquiry for basic iron, and it is estimated that not less than 200,000 tons could be sold right now for delivery up to April 1, but there are very few offerings, as, with restricted production, contracts all absorb the prospective output.

The scarcity of bessemer iron is not so acute as that of basic. In the case of foundry iron, there is a fair amount of inquiry, but the curtailment in production is not reflected so sharply, as the consumption of some foundries has decreased, and they have asked shipments to be curtailed because of that fact. It is known that the Government is working hard on plans to relieve the transportation problem, and the earliest definite relief that can be expected will come from curtailing operations in unessential industries. It will require some time to work out the program.

The additional scarcity of coke has made the blast furnaces still more reserved in offering iron for early deliveries. A number of the consumers have asked for better deliveries, and furnace managers are going to great lengths to arrange deliveries to the least disadvantage of all parties concerned.

A few transactions have taken place in early deliveries, and there has also been considerable inquiry in the same direction. Some of the furnaces are offering iron for delivery in 1918, and to their regular customers are willing to extend the contract to cover the whole year.

Difficulties in Shipments.

While the congestion of traffic affects the pig iron situation chiefly with respect to the supplies of coke to blast furnaces, there are also great difficulties in the shipment of pig iron, and there are some embargoes that retard the market as well. The market can be quoted firm at the Government prices: Bessemer, $36.30; basic and No. 2 foundry, (1.75 to 2.25 per cent. silicon,) $33; malleable, $35.50; gray forge, $32, f. o. b. valley and other furnaces, prices delivered Pittsburgh ranging as a rule from 79 to 95 cents.

The ferro-manganese market is steadier through the disappearance of $275 as a nominal quotation, the usual quotable level being $250. This price, however, is sometimes shaded by $2 to $4 a ton in the case of prompt or first half deliveries. Consumers are in the market at intervals only, and do not want to buy except for early deliveries. Some first half inquiry has been followed by a decision not to buy so far ahead at this time.

Government price setting for scrap iron has dulled the market, to the surprise of the dealers, who expected the reverse. Heavy melting steel was set at $30, when the market had been quotable at about $27 to $29. It would seem that such price fixing would not effect any change in the market, being below the Government limit, but, on the contrary, holders of scrap marked up prices sharply, expecting to secure practically the full price, $30, minus a very moderate margin to the dealer. However, consumers of scrap did not take the same attitude, and are not bidding $30 on any considerable tonnages, although there seems to be a demand for small lots at $30 for current requirements. While the dealers have no recourse but to quote $30 to customers, they are picking up very little material at prices permitting them to turn it over at a profit, and their usual bids are much below $30. The market quotations are: Heavy melting steel, $28 to $30; borings, $18 to $20; turnings, $18 to $20; No. 1 wrought, $33 to $35, delivered Pittsburgh, the higher prices being the set limits. Some one tried to bull the market by starting a rumor among the traders that one of their number was trying to secure more scrap than the Government allowed, but it was soon proved to be a canard.

Early deliveries of wire products are bringing about a fairly active market. In this trade the bulk of the business is not done for the far forward deliveries, except in cases in which the business is thrown forward by the mills getting behind in filling specifications, and at the present time there is very little forward business being done. Some of the wire mills were not booked ahead to the extent at first supposed, and many of them are booking orders quite freely since prices were set.

Nailmakers are at a disadvantage in the case of small nails, for the reason that the extras above base are fixed and were arrived at for ordinary times, while at present all costs are high, and there is not a correspondingly higher price on the small sizes. This has led to some of the mills seeking to place a restriction on specifications, requiring, for instance, that in a given specification not more than 20 per cent. should be in sizes less than two-inch, but buyers frequently succeed in getting through a specification with a larger percentage, notwithstanding the efforts of the mills. The market is quoted at $3.50 base for wire nails, and at $3.40 for cement coated, smooth fence wire being $3.25.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP FIGHT IS RENEWED

Municipal League Gathers Figures for the Incoming Administration.

TALK OF NEW APPRAISALS

But B. C. Marsh Does Not Expect to Get Much Help from the Legislature.

Since election The League for Municipal Ownership and Operation in New York City, of which Mayor-Elect Hylan is a Vice President, has been gathering facts and figures which the incoming administration will need when it proceeds to carry out that plank in its platform dealing with municipal ownership. Public attention was sharply called to the subject by the speech made on Thursday night before the Queens Chamber of Commerce by Public Service Commissioner Whitney, in which he alluded to the matter without committing himself or anybody else.

Persons really interested in the subject referred to Commissioner Whitney's speech as "shadowy," but the Municipal Ownership and Operation League is paying close attention to some figures alleged to show the value of the surface railroad lines, which apparently came from the Public Service Commission.

Benjamin C. Marsh, Executive Secretary of the league, said yesterday that the only method yet discovered of finding out what the assets of a public utility corporation are worth is to have them appraised by some person not connected with or interested in the corporation.

"It is necessary," he said, "to eliminate the watered stock which is always a notable characteristic of all public utility corporations. Last year we caused to be introduced into the Legislature two bills with the idea that if they were enacted into law the way would be cleared for taking over public utilities and operating them solely in the interest of the public. But the bills died in committee."

Mr. Marsh thought that this was an indication that the Legislature was antagonistic to the public ownership idea and that any legislation necessary for the purchase of any of the plants would find hard traveling in Albany. He said that one of the important steps toward municipal ownership would be the finding of enough money to buy the plants, and that another would be a careful, accurate and new appraisal of the property.

"In the next four years," he said, "it will be necessary for the city to raise $1,000,000,000 for its running expenses, which is at least one-sixth more than was needed in the last four years. Of course it might be possible to raise the money without much difficulty or by paying too much for it, but it is a problem that will have to be solved.

"Concerning the appraisal of the plants of the surface car lines, for instance, the Public Service Commission procured appraisals in 1914 of sixteen companies. Among them are the New York Railways Company, Third Avenue Railway Company, Coney Island and Brooklyn Railroad Company, North Shore Traction Company, and the Dry Dock, East Broadway and Battery Railroad Company. Appraisals were also made of the Kings County Lighting Company, Bronx Gas and Electric Company, Queens Borough Gas and Electric Company, and the Brooklyn Borough Gas Company.

"The figures may be of use today, but every estimate made several years ago by public officials or by the companies themselves, or by men financially interested in the companies, would not serve. To attempt to use such figures as a basis for a purchase price would at once arouse suspicion. Therefore no figures submitted by the companies in the present rate hearings of the surface lines would be useful unless they were checked up by some responsible authority."

Concerning the value of the surface lines, Mr. Marsh said that it might be possible to take them over at a fair value with an eye to the fact that the companies operating them recently declared in public statements that they were losing money and that if they were not permitted to charge for transfers or otherwise to increase their income they would fall into the hands of receivers. If this is a fact the properties ought to be acquired, Mr. Marsh thought, at a low figure. A company paying only 5 per cent. to its stockholders is not what can be called a successful corporation, but if the line was owned by the city and run without profit and entirely in the public interest it would give to the people of the city a ride at less than 5 cents, he declared.

"The elements to be charged for," said Mr. Marsh, "would have to be carefully considered. Any attempt to make the city pay for franchises should be combatted because the city would be only taking back its own. Additions made to the company's property and paid for out of surplus earnings should also be considered in the estimate of values."

Asked what he thought of the old argument that public ownership would place so many voters under the control of the city administration that it would be difficult to dislodge them, Mr. Marsh replied:

"If there ever was any foundation for such a fear it passed when the vote was given to women. No woman would tolerate bad service, because that would mean added expenses in the upkeep of the home, and added labor for the women who do the home work. The increase in the total vote would be sufficient to overcome any advantage that could be gained even if all the new employes engaged in operating public utilities could be induced to vote the one way, which is far from likely."

GENERAL ELECTRIC ISSUE.

Directors Vote to Increase Stock of Company by $20,000,000.

Directors of the General Electric Company, meeting in Boston yesterday, voted to increase the stock of the company by $20,000,000, of which $10,000,000 is to be issued to the stockholders at par. A special meeting of stockholders will be held in Schenectady, at the main office of the company, on Jan. 3, to vote upon the proposition. Only stock of record at the close of business Dec. 7 will be eligible to vote.

Directors also declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2 per share, and a special semi-annual dividend of $2, to be paid in stock, both dividends payable Jan. 15 to stock of record Dec. 7.

It was announced yesterday that the subscription books opened yesterday morning by J. P. Morgan & Co. and Lee, Higginson & Co. for the new issue of $10,000,000 of two-year 6 per cent. notes, offered on a basis to yield 6⅜ per cent., were closed immediately, as the issue was oversubscribed in advance. The note issue and the increase in capital, it is understood, are both to be employed in increasing the company's working capital to take care of the unprecedented rush of business due to war conditions.

THE BUILDING SITUATION.

Increasing Demand Hampered by Labor, Money, and Material

"The high prices of labor and material, the shortage of mortgage money and transportation and the policy of the Government to concentrate all possible energy upon war necessities are naturally causing the building industry much concern," said Franklin T. Miller, President of The Record and Guide, yesterday.

"Both long and short range plans are being turned over from week to week by those vitally interested. The question is piled high with difficulty, and we must rise with the occasion. As our cause is new so we must think anew and act anew.

"At the outset let us realize that buildings are essentially tools of industry and to a certain extent are war necessities, and that large amounts of money are now being spent throughout the country for materials of construction.

"We are not facing a general business depression, for general business is reported as excellent throughout the country, excepting possibly in the Northwest and South, where it is fairly good."

What will be the relative position of the building industry when the war is over, and what can be done in the meantime?

"In the meantime let us be sure that we know as exactly as possible 'where we are at.' The information gathered by the committee work, undertaken by the Chambers of Commerce in conjunction with the building trades in the principal industrial centres, when tabulated should show the present demand for buildings of various classes in various localities, the price and supply of materials, and their possible substitutes, the available supply of labor and mortgage money, and the needs of transportation facilities.

"Realizing the unfavorable reaction of war profiteering by other industries upon themselves as well as upon the country at large, the building industry may see that it is intelligent self-interest to promote building through a policy of minimum profit, such as cost plus 5 per cent., for the duration of the war.

"If this policy were universal in all building trades and with all building material manufacturers it would insure maximum volume of business to tide over this critical period and to keep this highly specialized organization from disintegration. The moral effect of such a policy would be in public interest. Such a policy might call forth spontaneous support from financial institutions, transportation interests, and from the Government itself.

"When probably within two or three years at most, the world has at last returned to peaceful operations, there is no other one industry which gives so certain a prospect of becoming the leader as that providing materials for construction work. This industry holds promise of a sensational activity.

"The close of the war will naturally free necessary labor, capital, and transportation. A worldwide building boom is inevitable during the period of reconstruction. The accumulating demand is self-evident."

DROPS NAME OF GERMANIA.

Fire Insurance Company Will Be Known as the National Liberty.

Directors of the Germania Fire Insurance Company, at a special meeting yesterday, voted to make application for an order authorizing the company to change its name to the National Liberty Insurance Company of America.

The company was chartered by the State of New York in 1859, and all of its officers are American-born. It has no German reinsurance contracts and is not in any way under German influence or control.

WANT ZONING LAWS.

Jersey City Realty Men Realize Their Value.

Jersey City is appreciating the necessity of passing zoning laws, and to that end is forming a Committee of One Hundred to look into the situation and prepare bills for the Assemblymen to introduce.

The Real Estate Board of Hudson County is taking active interest in the movement, for it realizes that if values are to be conserved, regulations must exist, so that improper improvements will not continue.

This movement is the direct result of the zoning laws passed in New York City during 1916. Careful analyses of conditions in this city have been made, and it was realized that unless drastic measures were taken across the river, no logical city development could be undertaken, and therefore realty values would suffer.

The zoning resolution, as applied to New York City, has had a marked effect on realty in the outlying districts. One of the deterrent factors which worked against real estate was the uncertainty in the minds of prospective purchasers as to how neighboring properties would be improved.

Many instances can be cited showing how whole neighborhoods have been seriously affected adversely through a single operation. Real estate interests in Jersey City are wise enough to appreciate this fact, and it is to be hoped that good judgment will be exercised in zoning off the city into districts which are logical, not only for today's needs, but also the requirements of the future.

RECORD TREASURY BALANCE

Due to Liberty Loan Payments Totaling $1,914,000,000 for the Week.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—The net balance in the Treasury today went to a new high record of $1,968,000,000, mainly because of receipts of $257,000,000 from Liberty Loan payments. This brought the total reported this week from the Liberty Loan to $1,914,000,000, exclusive of payment in credit and by certificates of indebtedness.

The remarkable overpayments of the Liberty Loan, known to Secretary McAdoo last night, prompted the announcement that two issues of certificates of indebtedness aggregating $700,000,000 would be paid Dec. 6 and Dec. 11, respectively, instead of Dec. 15, when they were to have matured.

ARMY AND NAVY NOTES.

After a continuous service of more than two years on the Mexican border, the Sixth United States Cavalry, Colonel Alonzo Gray in command, arrived at Fort Sam Houston, near San Antonio, last week. The command, one of the crack mounted units of the Regular Army, was transferred from the Big Bend country to Sam Houston and marched from Marfa, Texas, to its new post. The regiment made the journey in twenty-four days, one of the longest forced marches ever made by an American cavalry regiment in this country.

Since the Sixth went on border duty in the early part of 1915, it has covered thousands of miles in the course of its duty, both on the American side of the Rio Grande and in Mexico. Troops I and K of the Sixth were the only cavalry units that accompanied General Funston's expeditionary force to Vera Cruz. The Eighth United States Cavalry, under Colonel George Langhorne, has taken over the guarding of the Big Bend country, with headquarters at Presidio, Texas, opposite the Mexican town of Ojinaga, which was captured by Villa forces two weeks ago.

Colonel Daniel E. McCarthy, Quartermaster Corps, U. S. A., who went to France as Chief Quartermaster on the staff of General Pershing, has been invalided home. Shortly after his arrival in France Colonel McCarthy was taken seriously ill, and for several weeks was under treatment in one of the American military hospitals. Colonel McCarthy, who is one of the best-known officers of his rank in the army, was Chief Quartermaster of the division of regulars mobilized on the border in 1911. He is now at his home in Chicago.

Seven new Rear Admirals will shortly be added to the personnel of the navy. Four of these officers will be from the line, two from the Medical, and one from the Pay Corps. The names of the officers to be promoted will be announced by Secretary Daniels at an early date.

John B. Terres, the United States Consul at Port au Prince, Haiti, in a recent report to the State Department calls attention to the fact that the United States Marines, on duty in Haiti, have proved themselves as efficient as farmers as they are as fighting men. In the mountain regions, he says, the marines planted large crops of white potatoes, and that the yield has been so great that they will probably be in a position to ship large quantities to the United States. In addition to potatoes the marines also have under cultivation large tracts of land for the raising of vegetables of all kinds.

"These same marines," said an officer of the Marine Corps when he read the report of the Consul, "will be doing the same thing in France soon."

"It is probable," The Army and Navy Register of Washington says in a recent issue, "that the War Department estimates which will be submitted when Congress convenes in December will contemplate the needs of an army of 3,000,000 men for the fiscal year 1918-19. There has been considerable doubt in the minds of the military authorities, apparently, as to whether the estimates should be based on a military force of 1,600,000 or 2,000,000 men, and it seems to be the part of wisdom that the conclusion has been reached to reject each numerical strength in favor of a force of 3,000,000. It is considered that estimates might as well be founded on such a force as on one of half that size, whether or not it is found necessary to organize, equip, and train a body of 3,000,000 men. At least, Congress will come into possession of definite statistics regarding the cost of an army of that proportion, and it is almost a foregone conclusion that if 3,000,000 men are not under arms during the next fiscal year it will be because the war is over rather than that there will be no need of them if the enemy keeps on fighting. Some one has also suggested that, inasmuch as the departmental estimates are given the widest publicity and are so destined to easily come into the possession of the enemy, it might be just as well to inform him that this country seriously contemplates an army somewhere near the demands of the situation."

An examination will be held at the Bureau of Yards and Docks, Navy Department, Washington, D. C., to establish a list of eligibles for enrollment in the Civil Engineer Corps of the United States Naval Reserve Force. This examination will close at noon of Dec. 31, 1917. To compete in this examination it is only necessary for the candidate to address a letter to the Reserve Examining Board, giving full information as to his education and experience, with testimonials and references. A descriptive circular giving detailed information of the requirements for this examination is about ready for distribution, and will be sent to interested parties upon request to the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, Navy Department, Washington, D. C. Candidates recommended for enrollment will be authorized to appear before the nearest medical officer of the United States Navy for physical examination. Those found to be physically unfit will not be enrolled. Candidate must be an American citizen, and must be an engineer in active practice of the profession of civil, electrical, or mechanical engineering or some business directly connected with these professions.

The War Department has issued the following instructions regarding the promotion of officers whose status is that of Temporary Second Lieutenants:

1. From time to time commanding officers forward applications from temporary Second Lieutenants, regular army, for consideration in the matter of promotion. Some commanding officers urge legislation which will put such officers in line of promotion, but apparently no one has given exhaustive consideration to the matter nor suggested a plan which will meet the wishes of individuals and which at the same time will be fair to the United States.

2. In opening the grade of temporary Second Lieutenant, regular army, to enlisted men of excellent character and faithful service in time of peace, the President has done about all that can be done for these men unless they fulfill the legal requirements as to age, education, and physical condition for appointment as Provisional Second Lieutenants. The attitude of the War Department toward this class of soldiers has been as benevolent as possible under the law, and in the interest of the service.

3. Suggestion is sometimes heard that the law be changed, and comparison is made between good old noncommissioned officers and young training camp graduates, but the practice of taking younger men for the permanent line of promotion is followed for reasons too well known to the army to warrant discussion at this time.

4. Therefore, for the time being, nothing will be done for temporary Second Lieutenants, regular army, in the way of promotion unless they can fulfill the requirements for appointment as Provisional Second Lieutenants. However, it may be possible later to transfer to the national army temporary Second Lieutenants whose services merit promotion.

Casting aside the old tradition that a soldier who marches at the "route step" will travel further and with less fatigue than while at "attention," United States Marines have adopted the latter style of hiking, exclusively.

It has been proved that the old "go-as-you-please" method, so long in vogue in military units, will tire out the men much quicker than the correct military style used at parades and drill. Marines, who have used the "route step" during long-distance hikes in the Philippines, Haiti, and elsewhere, have adopted the "attention" method to conform with the practice in vogue in Europe.

The following regarding the work of motor trucks in camp construction appears in The Army and Navy Journal:

"United States Truck Company 57, Captain K. G. Martin in command, which is stationed at Camp Dodge, Iowa, and consists of thirty-three White two-ton trucks, has been conducting manoeuvres to test the rapid transportation of troops. It was found that an entire company of soldiers could be loaded from the ground, with rifles and equipment, in 15 seconds. Experiments have also been made in field manoeuvres, and trains of trucks run in sections, each section loaded with men detailed for special duty, such as the laying of signal lines, the placing of explosive charges, and the guarding of approaches. When not employed in other work practice in "camouflage" has been carried on. Camouflaging experts have covered trenches with branches of trees and foliage to make them invisible even at a short distance; paint and canvas have been used in designing false tops to make them blend into the general landscape; smoke screens have been experimented with and numerous other measures tested with satisfactory results. When Captain Martin and his company arrived at Camp Dodge from the United States Motor Storage Detachment at Fort Bliss the place was nothing more than a typical Iowa cornfield. There was not a single finished building in the camp, and for several nights the company used the trucks as barracks. During the next two months the trucks worked twelve to eighteen hours a day delivering building materials, machinery, tools, and supplies necessary to the construction of the new wooden city. In this work they registered a total mileage of over 225,000 miles."

The Army and Navy Gazette of London, the leading service paper of Great Britain, in a recent issue lauds the "Liberty" engine, which is to furnish the motive power for the thousands of airplanes now under construction for the Aviation Section of the Signal Corps.

"More than 20,000 airplanes are in course of construction in the United States and the Secretary of War has issued the statement," says the Gazette, "that 'when the nation's army moves up to participate in the fighting the eyes of her army will be ready.' The types of airplanes range from light training machines to powerful bombing aircraft and battleplanes of light weight and high speed, and everything belonging to them will have been manufactured in the States. The all-American engine will have been standardized and the training of the airmen both in America and in Europe is being intensively carried on, so that when the pilots are ready the machines will be ready also to be handed over to them with all accessories, from instruments for navigation, bomb-dropping, and photographic apparatus to machine guns and cartridges. The American air service will be self-supplied and equipped with spares, repair shops, transport, and all that it needs from home. Twenty-four flying schools have been brought into being in the States; several of the great universities are turning out cadets for the Flying Corps, and thousands of the picked young men of the nation are registering for training. The supply of suitable candidates, as might be expected, is, for all practical purposes, unlimited. In the picturesque phraseology of the western world, Germany, in bringing the United States into the war by her brutality and colossal misconception of the character of the American nation, its leaders, and, not least, its President, has certainly 'bitten off more than she can chew.' The new aero-engine has been appropriately called the 'Liberty' engine.

Major Adna R. Chaffee, a son of the late Lieut. Gen. Chaffee, who in 1900 wrote the now famous note to the German Field Marshal von Waldersee, calling the German commander to task for permitting the looting of the ancient Chinese Observatory at Peking, is Adjutant General of the Eighty-first Division of the national army at Camp Jackson, S. C.

Colonel Frank E. Bamford, U. S. A., who as a captain in the Twenty-eighth Infantry had charge of the maintenance of order in Vera Cruz during the American occupation of that port in 1914, is exercising an important command in one of the regular army divisions.

The officers of the Philippine Scouts are to a man anxious to get to France, and join in the fighting under Pershing. In a letter to the editor of The Army Journal one of these officers writes:

"Very little," he says, "is heard of the Philippine Scouts outside of the Philippines in these exciting times. But they are still on the job and all of the Scout officers are anxious to go to France. Particularly the younger officers, and many have applied for detail or appointment in the national army. The answer to these applications has been that the Scout officers are badly needed in the Philippines to replace officers of the regular service who are ordered home for the purpose of training our new army, or words to that effect. Several of the officers who were within the age limit have taken the examination and have been appointed provisional Second Lieutenants in the regular service and it is not surprising that they are making good. The rest of the Scout officers, who are debarred from taking the examination on account of age or marriage, or both, realize that they are doing their bit inasmuch as some one must stay in the islands, and they will do it cheerfully. What they hope for is recognition."

A recent recruit of the United States Marine Corps is Israel Putnam, 5th. Young Putnam, who is a descendant of the famous Israel Putnam of the Revolution, is a private, and is now training with one of the marine units which is destined for service in France under Brig. Gen. Charles A. Doyen.

The navy is recalling to active service many of its most distinguished retired officers. One of those now back in service is Rear Admiral Reginald F. Nicholson, former Commander in Chief of the Asiatic Fleet, and a former Chief of the Bureau of Navigation. Admiral Nicholson has been ordered to Valparaiso, Chile, as Naval Attaché of the American Embassy.

Brig. Gen. Malvern-Hill Barnum, who was General Pershing's Chief of Staff during the operations which followed the Villa raid on Columbus, N. M., has been assigned to command the 183d Brigade of Infantry, at Camp Grant, near Rockford, Ill.

ARE YOU QUALIFIED?
Excellent positions are now open to all those who qualify, not only for Government positions, but to fill the many vacancies in leading New York firms. It is the general opinion that stenography is a very difficult study to master. Such is not the case, as the average Moon student can take dictation at the rate of 100 words per minute at the expiration of 30 days by the Boyd Syl-lab-ic System. So confident are we that any young man or woman with an average education can attain a speed of 100 words per minute in shorthand in 30 days by our Syl-lab-ic System that we invite you to enroll at our risk. If, after becoming a student at one of our schools and attending for three days, you feel that it will be impossible for you to master stenography in 30 days' time, we will cheerfully return the entire fee.

RED CROSS TO TRAIN SPEAKERS FOR DRIVE

New York Chapter Prepares for Nation-Wide Campaign for Members.

COURSE OPEN TO PUBLIC

Report Shows That Donations for Ambulances and Trailers Have Amounted to $96,142.

In preparation for the nation-wide Red Cross membership campaign and to meet the demands upon the Red Cross for speakers, the New York County Chapter, 389 Fifth Avenue, will give a three days' course in public speaking for volunteers. Registrations for this course, which starts Dec. 5, continuing Dec. 6 and 7, now are being received by Mrs. Frazier Peters at the headquarters of the chapter. All who want to take up public speaking in the interest of the Red Cross are invited to enroll. Those taking the course will make a first hand study of the work the Red Cross is doing. They will visit the teaching centre at 35 Madison Avenue, and the workrooms where surgical dressings and hospital garments are being made.

Lectures will be given by persons prominently identified with Red Cross work. Every activity, from civilian relief to methods of organization, will be outlined by experts. There will be a class in voice criticism. At the close of the course the graduates will be listed by the Red Cross Speakers' Bureau to be sent out to address gatherings on the work the Red Cross is doing.

The course will be under the direction of Mrs. Richard Aldrich, Director of the West Side Branch of the Chapter, 2,121 Broadway, who is Chairman of the Education Bureau. The Speakers' Bureau, which is co-operating in the work of turning out finished Red Cross speakers is under the direction of Mrs. Joseph Griswold Deane.

Practically every day requests for speakers are received from clubs, churches, schools, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A. and other organizations. Indicative of the growing interest in the work of the Red Cross, a number of Barnard College girls have volunteered their services as Red Cross speakers.

A comprehensive review of the work of the Ambulance Department of the chapter for the last twelve months is contained in a report prepared by Lieutenant James Boyd, Director of the department. The report shows that donations for ambulances and trailers amounting to $96,142.11 have been received by the chapter. Of this amount $29,200 was specified for kitchen trailers and $42,992.43 for ambulances, leaving an unspecified balance of $23,949.68.

Six ambulances also have been presented to the chapter, of which two were given to the United States Army Ambulance Service, Allentown, Penn.; two to Ambulance Company 33, Syracuse, N. Y., and one to its naval base hospital, Cape May, N. J. The sixth was retained for exhibition purposes.

One standard ambulance has been presented to the 7th Regiment, N. G. N. Y.; one to the 23d Regiment, N. G. N. Y.; one to the German Hospital Unit, New York; one ambulance trailer to the Bellevue Hospital Unit, one to the New York Hospital, and one to Mount Sinai Hospital. In addition, purchases have been made for account of the Presbyterian Hospital of three ambulances and trucks, and for Mount Sinai Hospital of two ambulances and one truck.

Two thousand two hundred men registered for ambulance service at the Ambulance Department. Three hundred and thirty were sent to base hospitals for enlistment, and 900 to various ambulance companies and the United States Army Ambulance Service at Allentown. All base hospitals and ambulance companies are now enlisted up to strength, but we continue to forward men to Allentown, and have been designated as a recruiting office for that service.

The following contributions of $100 or more were acknowledged yesterday by the New York County Chapter:

French Wounded Fund.

The finest woolen materials to be had in the United States are going to clothe destitute women and children in the devastated sections of that part of Northern France which has been recaptured by the allied armies. The Waist and Dress Manufacturers' Association and the Cotton Textile Manufacturers' Association have arranged to make a Christmas present of 100,000 warm garments to the French sufferers. Offers of material and other assistance are coming in to the American Fund for French Wounded, 20 West Twenty-third Street, from every branch of the clothing industry.

The great woolen houses have already donated 75,000 yards of fabrics, with a promise of more when needed, while other branches of the industry have given thousands of yards of flannels, sheeting, and other materials. A large realty firm has donated the use of a large loft for the manufacture of the cloth into garments. Experienced manufacturers will supervise the manufacture of the garments. The operators and machines hava been donated by various houses.

The 100,000 completed garments will be turned over to the Fund for French Wounded and the American Red Cross for distribution, these two forces now co-operating in civilian relief work in Northern France.

Red Cross Christmas Seal.

The Atlantic Division of the American Red Cross, 44 East Twenty-third Street, and the New York County Chapter, 389 Fifth Avenue, call the attention of the public to the unusual importance of the coming sale of Red Cross Christmas seals. The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis conducts the sale of these seals. The Red Cross co-operates by furnishing the seals and the prestige of its name.

The funds raised in this way finance national, State, and local campaigns against the disease. This year the association is out after $3,000,000, and the Red Cross, although it has no official part in the sale, wants to do all it can to help make it a success.

The Atlantic Division is asking chapters in its jurisdiction, which comprises the States of New York, Connecticut, and New Jersey, to urge every member to do everything in his or her power to help local committees make the coming sale a record-breaking one.

"The Christmas seal forms the connecting link between the Red Cross and the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, to which has been properly delegated the selling of these seals," the statement of the Atlantic Division says.

"The success of this association's war campaign against the increase of tuberculosis due to military conditions will go far toward preventing much general suffering which the Red Cross would otherwise be later called upon to relieve. To insure this success means to greatly increase funds. Upon the sale of Red Cross seals this depends. Let us help them get it."

The National Association is co-operating with the Medical Board of the Council of National Defense in combating the spread of tuberculosis among the soldiers and sailors and their families, a condition which has become acute among the warring nations of Europe.

OUTSIDE THE CAMP.

Importance of Providing Sane Recreation for Soldiers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is a much less conspicuous drive than that of the Y. M. C. A., but one of no less importance. It is that of the War Camp Community Recreation Fund, a branch of the Army and Navy Department Commissions on Training Camp Activities.

Its object is to take care of the men during their hours out of camp. At 7 o'clock, for instance, the towns about these camps swarm with soldiers, and many obtain leave of absence during the day. Now, we all know that men never grow up, and we remember the ancient adage of Satan and idle hands. Unless farsighted men and women had tackled this question early in the war, such of these towns as were left would have (to say nothing of the poor innocent maidens who always flee from soldiers) been painted crimson with a regularity as monotonous as cannonading at the front.

But these men and women immediately banded together, opened their purses, and not only fitted up clubrooms for the men to write their letters in—furnishing the stationery—but induced the Masons or Odd Fellows to give the soldiers the use of their bathrooms. The other day I saw in Hempstead two of these fine clubrooms, one in the former Sunday school room of the Presbyterian Church and one on the ground floor of an office building. At 7 o'clock, when I visited them the second time, every chair was occupied by men writing letters, reading, or listening to the graphophone. Many others were spending the evening in homes of the residents, where they had been asked to dine. A member of the staff at Camp Mills told me that every day some one of the well-to-do residents called him up and either told him to send six or eight of the boys over to get a hot bath, or to dine and then dance with some of the nicer girls of the town.

Although the streets were packed there was no sign of disorder, and I was told not a single soldier had ever abused the hospitality extended to him or been offensive in any way.

If all Americans at some time or other could visit these camps they would become quite abruptly, if they never had had time to think of it before, very proud of the young men of our country who are being turned into soldiers for its defense. They are a magnificent looking lot—those I happened to see were from the Northwest—upstanding, proud, clean-cut, and also serious and resolute. One feels perfect confidence in their ability as well as in their determination to defend us. But most of them are very far from home, with no place to go when they leave camp except these clubrooms, and there are not enough of them, particularly in the city of New York. The W. C. C. R. F. wants money to start a great many more reading rooms, (there are many empty rooms in office buildings and unoccupied houses that could be used for this purpose), hot baths, (which the soldiers and sailors prize above all things), swimming pools, rooms where they can play games, or dance with young women sent by suitable organizations, theatrical entertainments, good hotel accommodation for Westerners and Southerners who have never seen New York.

The same staff officer told me that not only did such care for the young men's leisure hours keep up their spirits and prevent homesickness, but the more satisfied they were the more quickly they learned; and most of them have everything to learn. If they are homesick and sullen their minds close up, as the mind always does under any obsession.

It must be remembered that whether these boys have joined the army out of a youthful desire for adventure or merely because they were drafted and could not help themselves, the fact remains that there they are, and that upon them and their able officers depends our permanence as a nation. There is nothing too much we can do for them before they leave the training camps to join the fighting forces in France. This War Camp Community Recreation Fund, therefore, is doing a great work, and its main offices, both here (in the McAlpin Hotel) and in Washington, are hives of activity. But they need more money. Even the citizens in the towns adjacent to the camps have given all they can afford, and feel that a call should be made on the public. It was never approached in a finer cause or one more vital to its own interests, and there is no doubt that it will respond generously when it wakes up to the fact that there are thousands of lonely young soldiers roaming the streets every day, with no place to go that does not cost too much for their slender resources, and doing their very best to be good.

Charles H. Sabin is the Treasurer of the National Committee, but checks from New Yorkers should be made out to Earnest Stauffen, Jr., Vice President of the Liberty National Bank, as he is Treasurer of the local New York campaign. John N. Willys is the National Chairman, John F. Schindler is Chairman of the New York Committee.

Of course, the main object of this association is to fight the always watchful dark forces of organized vice. Most of these young men that come East or North from country and mountain districts are as sound as their own forests, and it is essential to the safety of the country that they remain so. The work does not in any way conflict with the Y. M. C. A., but works in harmony with it, its operations being entirely outside the camps.

A Musician Must Turn Plumber.

A certain little Italian boy, who would resent being called little since he is trying so hard to be the "man of his family," has given up becoming a musician as his music-loving nature prompted him, and is meeting the realities of life by learning to be a plumber. Gaspar excelled in the school band, and the entire neighborhood is proud of the way he plays airs with his cornet, but a widowed mother and three little sisters looked to him to fill his father's place, so the boy decided that the wages of a pipe mender would fill their needs more adequately than the precarious earnings of a musician. Since the father died, the Charity Organization Society has helped the mother to keep her children together, and when Gaspar finished school and decided on his career the society started him in a trade school so as to better equip him in meeting the struggle for existence. To help the mother and children through the Winter and enable the boy to finish his trade training the society urgently asks for $276. Gifts should be sent to the office, 105 East Twenty-second Street, and will be promptly acknowledged.

VISCOUNT MORLEY'S BOOK OF RECOLLECTIONS

An Important Work That Gives a Vivid Glimpse of a Great Statesman and His Contemporaries

RECOLLECTIONS. By John Viscount Morley, O. M., Hon. Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford. In two volumes. New York: The Macmillan Company. $7.50.

IN reference to the death of his friend and colleague, Sir William Harcourt, Lord Morley remarks that a long and illustrious line of statesmen had come to an end. New elements of feeling, he points out, were "edging their way into the public mind. • • • Harcourt was the last stout-hearted representative of the parliamentary polity of a long and not inglorious era." Now, taking up the record of that distinguished life whose public activity came to such an abrupt end in August, 1914—Viscount Morley's own—that word on Harcourt presents itself as something very like a text. In politics and in literature Lord Morley has been one of the very great men of his time, one of the great Englishmen of all time. For thirty-one years he was a statesman whose place in the Government of his country was not only prominent but important. He resigned from the Cabinet when war broke out, and his retirement thus synchronizes precisely with the end of an epoch. His "Recollections" are not only the most valuable personal autobiography of years; they are the history of that epoch—intimate, suggestive, significant, important beyond words of ours idly to emphasize; and always—history, the history of a "long and not inglorious era" in a pregnant, vanished past.

Lord Morley's work was varied, and his intellectual activity versatile, to a point which we in America do not always find easy to understand. The reader of these momentous "Recollections" must be struck on almost every page with the range of Morley's magnificent mind; his mastery of the myriad concrete details of political action and the intricate zest of his scholarship. But when the whole book is read and pondered over, one salient thing stands out through it all: Lord Morley's liberalism. He was a Liberal in party politics, but he was, even as a statesman, much more than that; in wisdom and in generosity he always took the truly liberal side. He was liberal in religion, in his views of education, of society, of history itself. He was liberal in his scholarship. Personally, he was liberal alike toward his friends and his enemies. He was never a sentimentalist. He never held back from the hard or stern or candid thing, or sacrificed his principles to pleasantness. But they were liberal principles always. For more than half a century he was identified with—more, he personified—the liberalism of England. And it is characteristic that at the very beginning of his book and of his life, he should have emphasized that point in the mental attitudes and struggles of the day. He calls attention to the revolution in thought that was going on during his college days, and continues:

> If we seek a word for the significance of it all, it is not hard to find. Alike with those who adore and those who detest it, the dominating force in the living mind of Europe for a long generation after the overthrow of the French monarchy in 1830 has been that marked way of looking at things, feeling them, handling them, judging main actors in them, for which, with a hundred kaleidoscopic turns, the accepted name is Liberalism. It is a summary term with many extensive applications; people are not always careful to sort them out, and they are by no means always bound to one another. • • •
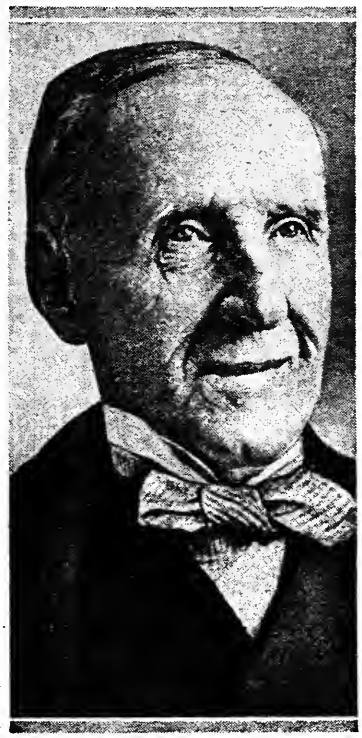
> Respect for the dignity and worth of the individual is its root. It stands for pursuit of social good against class interest or dynastic interest. It stands for the subjection to human judgment of all claims of external authority, whether in an organized Church, or in more loosely gathered societies of believers, or in books held sacred. In law making it does not neglect the higher characteristics of human nature, it attends to them first. In executive administration, though judge, jailer, and perhaps the hangman will be indispensable, still mercy is counted a wise supplement to terror. General Gordon spoke a noble word for liberalist ideas when he upheld the sovereign duty of trying to creep under men's skins.

We quote this early summary at so much length because it is indeed the keynote of Morley's life, his character, and his activities. Inevitably, he became a member of liberal-thinking groups at Oxford, became known as a liberal in religious matters and in the whole scope of international politics. Leaving college in 1859, he decided quickly upon journalism as a career. As he points out, "The young graduate, born with a political frame of mind who, toward 1860, found himself transported from Oxford in pursuit of a literary calling, had little choice but journalism," and, after an interesting discussion of that profession, adds, "Though journalism may kill a man, it quickens his life while it lasts."

Between 1886 and 1910 Morley's outstanding political activity centred in the problems of India and Ireland.



JOHN MORLEY

And on these problems, their actual conditions and the discussions and acts of the British Government and its individual representatives, "Recollections" throws a clear and steady light. From the record of the first home rule fight in 1886 to the publication of long extracts from the letters that Morley, as Secretary of State for India, wrote to the Viceroy, Lord Minto, in the years 1905-1910, these "Recollections" give us, here, intimate history, indeed.

Few chapters in English history, says Lord Morley frankly, do that nation so little honor as the quarrel between England and Ireland in the five years from 1880. It was a time of "agitation and bloodshed in Ireland, violence and confusion in Parliament. The ragged Sphinx had once more come forth with deadly weapons under her tattere." And as a journalist, before he entered Parliament at all, Morley was combating the mistaken policy of the Irish Government, pointing out the reasons for its failure and declaring a change "inevitable." On Jan. 31, 1886, he made the following entry in his diary:

> Was writing an article peacefully at home, until 1 o'clock, when telegram arrived from Mr. Gladstone asking me to call on him at Carlton House Terrace at 2. I got there to the moment, and found him at his writing table, with no sign of fuss or hurry. He had to make to me, he said, an important proposition, and it was that I should accept the office of Irish Secretary. Nothing could have taken me more by surprise. • • • I asked what was to be the Irish policy or at least the base of it. He drew a paper from a drawer and read it to me. I took it, behind all the words about future examination and so forth, to point pretty definitely to home rule in some shape or other, but I told him that before accepting I should like to have some talk with Chamberlain, with whom I had worked on very close and intimate terms for many years. • • • I asked only a couple of hours to consider. • • •
> In a pretty tense frame of mind, I • • • noted down seven separate, strong reasons against my fitness for the Irish office, and then went across to Mr. Gladstone. I steadily recited my seven objections. He swept them aside wholesale, made me a cordial speech about confidence in my loyalty, and evidently means me for a special ally. It must be the critical post. I knew too well the responsibility of the step I had taken to have room for a spark of elation.

As Secretary of State for India, Morley took office as the avowed champion of important reforms. It may be pointed out that the inclusion of native members in the Executive Councils of India was a very long step forward indeed. The invaluable series of letters to Lord Minto make plain the generosity, the liberalism, the firm and undaunted wisdom of Morley's policy. His councils were no more for a careless license than for autocracy and coercion; they were councils of strong democratic government. Lord Minto co-operated with him, although they sometimes disagreed in detail.

It is not too much to say that Lord Morley does not mention one prominent figure of his time—scarcely one person—without giving the reader a living picture of the man. And there are few men of his era with whom he was not closely associated. What he has to say of Gladstone, especially of the failure of his last Cabinet, is as vivid as it is valuable. His record of his own friendship with Joseph Chamberlain, their close early association, their political separation, their constant personal liking, is of tremendous interest. His portrait of Parnell is altogether informative. He is notably fair and interesting in his pictures of his opponents, who were often his personal friends, and the reader may turn with especial interest, perhaps, to what he has to say of Curzon and Balfour. He sketches delightfully the rise of "a group of younger men"—Asquith, Grey, and others.

And although it is probable that every reader will look with particular avidity, and read with especial enjoyment, the fine tribute that Lord Morley pays to George Meredith, it must be noted that he has other literary portraits of only secondary interest—Matthew Arnold, John Stuart Mill, and others. Also, he has a piquant and pleasing reference to his two journeys to America, his acquaintance with Colonel (then President) Roosevelt, and many a friendly mention of his good companion, Andrew Carnegie. Among the portraits two, at different times, of the German Emperor are naturally conspicuous. And throughout the book the vista of Morley's scholarly mind, its serious achievement and its rare leisurely enjoyment, opens wonderfully to the reader's eye.

It is, indeed, so scholarly a mind, and the fine clarity of his style is so pure, that perhaps too great emphasis has been laid upon its "classic" quality. Classic, Lord Morley's manner of writing is. But to dismiss it with that as summary is to pay too little homage to its charm.

For, as a piece of writing, "Recollections" is charming—charming in the fine, large, literal sense of holding, pleasing, delighting, the reader's mind. The writer's humor is as quick as his logic and his practical common sense. His figures are always vivid, often arrestingly gay. His wealth of allusion is marked, of course, and his critical faculty is apparent, but his fine literary vitality is no less notable. He has moments of sprightly turn of speech and other moments of quick poetic expression. He has, too, little characteristic word usages of charming colloquial quality—"feel" as a noun, "English" as a verb, the repeated use of the adjective "provoking." His letters and diaries are altogether delightful.

MICHAEL, BROTHER OF JERRY. By Jack London. With frontispiece. The Macmillan Company. $1.60 net.

IN the "Foreword" which he wrote to "Michael, Brother of Jerry," Mr. London declared that very early in his life he had learned to "dislike the performances of trained animals." For curiosity had led him to look behind the scenes in order to discover how the thing was done, and there he saw "a body of cruelty so horrible" that he, who had seen all sorts of terrible things, found absolutely unendurable "the cold-blooded, conscious cruelty and torment" which had attained "its perfect flower in the trained animal world." Wherefore he always rose and left the theatre when a trained animal turn was on. Presently he came to believe that every ordinarily decent human being would do the same, did he or she but know "the terrible cruelty that * * * makes them possible," thereby abolishing the trained animal turns altogether, since managers would not want them, once they were convinced of their unpopularity. And partly at least in order to further that purpose this book was written.

For in it Mr. London gives the history of Michael, an Irish terrier, own blood brother to "Jerry of the Islands." It so happened that it was Michael's fate to fall into the hands of an animal trainer, Harris Collins, the most noted animal trainer in the United States, whose place, the "Cedarwild Animal School," was the very last word in sanitation, efficiency, and cruelty. It was "business from the first tick of the clock to the last bite of the lash"—a veritable "animal hell." There ponies were taught to kneel down in the arena, through the persuasion of ropes and of "a short, stiff whip of rattan"; greyhounds forced to jump "better than their best" in order to escape the whip-lash, often straining themselves badly in the process; mules taught to buck by the use of spiked saddles; lions made to roar and leap and thrash around by the use of electrically wired cages which burned their paws, so that it was exactly as if they were "dancing on a red-hot stove." And then there were the dogs. Collins declared that while you could "love dogs" into doing tricks in an amateurish sort of manner, for the professional stage where the program must run like clock-work and the dogs do real tricks, "tricks they hate," there was only one way to insure success, and that was through fear. He laughed derisively at the foolish public, silly enough to believe that there was or could be any bond of affection between dogs or any other kind of animal and their trainers, even while he advised those who consulted him to make it appear that their animals were fond of them. Of course, Collins had his failures. Though by dint of prolonged torture he had made the Royal Bengal from the jungle into a "broken" and "educated" tiger, the great bear tore himself to pieces, wrenching out the metal rings fastened into his nostrils and ears. It was only by accident that Michael's own specialty was discovered, after Collins had tried everything he could think of and turned him from a joyous, good-tempered, affectionate, and play-ful dog into a morose animal, who even after his rescue by Villa and Harley Kennan was a subdued creature who had had "all play taken out of him." But if he could not play he could still fight for those he loved, and the day came when he richly repaid Villa and Harvey for what they had done for him.

But though Michael had three years of part agony, part dreary imprisonment, years whose mark was no more to be effaced than was the mark the leopard's paw had left upon his shoulder, he had a good time both before and afterward. The story opens on the beach at Tulagi. From Tulagi Michael was stolen by Dan Daughtry, steward on the Makambo, who took him, intending to sell him. He was very good to Michael, and Michael loved him with a passionate, whole-hearted devotion mixed with adoration. Under his teaching—teaching of the gentlest kind—Michael quickly learned to do all sorts of tricks, and even to count up to five. These were no hardship to the dog, who did them eagerly and enjoyed doing them, since they pleased the master he worshipped. And Dan Daughtry grew to love Michael so dearly that he presently refused an offer many times larger than the sum he had originally hoped to obtain for him. On board the Makambo and later on the Mary Turner Michael was a very popular and much petted dog, who had about as happy a lot as any doggish heart could wish. But men's greed and the failing of a terrible curse, one of the worst afflictions known to human beings, presently intervened between Michael and his master. And then came the "animal hell," and after that the stage, and at last peace and as much happiness as it was possible for one to feel who had known suffering such as his, there in the Valley of the Moon, with Villa and Harvey Kennan.

It is, of course, scarcely necessary to say that much of this book is anything but pleasant reading. If, however, what it tells be indeed the truth, then it is reading which people should have forced upon them. And there are many interesting episodes in the tale, notably the account of the destruction of the schooner by an enraged whale. Michael himself will appeal to all dog-lovers, and Dan Daughtry is well drawn. Well drawn, too, is the man Dan nicknamed the "Ancient Mariner," a clever and entertaining fraud. But the memory one carries away from the book is principally a memory of the horrors, the merciless, deliberate, calculated cruelty of the "Cedarwild Animal School."

APRON-STRINGS

APRON-STRINGS. By Eleanor Gates. New York: Sully & Kleinteich. $1.35.

IN her new story the author of "The Poor Little Rich Girl" reiterates her diatribe against the selfish parent. Only this time it is not the wealthy couple ignoring their child who are the mark for her arrows, but the mother who in the name of love and duty absorbs her daughter's attention and ruins her daughter's life. As the dedication suggests, the book deals with the three types of mothers into whose categories these whom Miss Gates knows seem to fall:

> The kind that does not plan for, or want, a child, but, having borne one, invariably takes the high air of martyrdom, feeling that she has rendered the supreme service, and that, henceforth, nothing is too good for her. Second, the mother who loves her own children devotedly, and has as many as her health and the family purse will permit, but who is fairly indifferent to other women's children. Last of all * * * the mother who loves anybody's children—everybody's children.

The two people who figure largely are Mrs. Milo, the first type, and her daughter, Sue, a woman of 45, of the third. She is torn between her two inclinations: the one, to obey the dictates of her supremely selfish and stupid parent; the other, to give way to the maternal instincts which make her mother the whole orphanage, an institution for abandoned children in the neighborhood. Sue's rebellion comes so late that she is no longer able to enjoy the domestic relation in which she would find the greatest happiness. But when she does free herself from her mother's apron-strings she herself becomes a mother vicariously by adopting one of the unclaimed children on whom the force of circumstance has given her a prior claim.

Before this happy consummation, however, all varieties of confused relationships have diverted the reader from the main issue. There is the wretched couple who decline to address each other, and have to hold all their conversation through a mediator, or, rather, through an intermediary, since they never patch up their quarrel. There is their daughter, who becomes engaged simply to free herself from her unhappy existence with her incompatible parents. There are further complications between Sue's brother and another woman, the familiar triangle which somehow turns polygonal as one looks at it.

But, despite all these tangles and its intended propaganda the story fails of interest. The situation is credible if improbable, but the characters are the merest caricatures, even Sue. The claim that "her story is new, because the conditions which make such a sacrifice possible are new" is not borne out by the facts. Sue's story is older than mid-Victorianism. Nor does the solution of economic freedom seem to present itself to either of the harassed daughters in the tale. Miss Gates's theme is an interesting one, but she treats it sentimentally and thereby fails to give it the effectiveness which is its due.

THE NEXT OF KIN

THE NEXT OF KIN. By Nellie L. McClung. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.25.

THE sixteen brief tales in this book are bound together by the same thing which draws close the people who figure in them—the war. For the author is concerned with the way in which war, and the sacrifices made for it, the burdens borne in it, touches those whom she knows best, the women and children of Canada. With few exceptions these are stories of women who have given up their sons, of others who are widowed, because they cherish the idea of the British Empire, and are ready to give bread and blood "the sacrament of empire" to save it. And almost every one is a story of cheerful sacrifice or of proud courage in sorrow. There is the story of the woman who had lost three sons, and who came down to the station to see the other boys off, in the hope of adopting one of them to be a "war-mother" to him. This is matched by that of the wife of the disciplinarian doctor, whose recruiting speeches give her courage to defy him and adopt two small children, orphaned through the war.

But though the book is naturally full of the tragedy of war, it is relieved by the author's nice sense of humor and by the thread of suffrage argument running boldly through it. These lend it a certain charm. For they are in strong contrast to the tenor of many of the stories, and to all of the verse, which is of a weak, sentimental turn. Indeed, the book is a curious mixture of sound sense and nonsense, of wit and banality, of sympathetic understanding and sentimental sophistry. What it is marked by that sincerity which one finds in so many pseudo-public documents, such as the letters written by the farm women of the United States in response to a Governmental inquiry. These are for the most part what is popularly known as "human" stories. They should have a large popular appeal. The note of optimism is strongly stressed, even

MARK TWAIN'S LETTERS

Arranged with Comment by ALBERT BIGELOW PAINE

For more than ten years Albert Bigelow Paine, the biographer of Mark Twain, has been at work gathering together these wonderful letters. The result is probably the most important, certainly the most fascinating, book of the year.

"They abound in whim, in humorous exaggeration, in imagination, and in energy. They are delightful reading in themselves in the first place, and in the second as revelations of the character and the characteristics of Mr. Samuel L. Clemens, who was in some ways a different person from Mr. Mark Twain, known to all the world."—Brander Matthews in The N. Y. Times.

in the more tragic tales. Sacrifice is rewarded; courage is blessed; nobility is crowned with honor. Nowhere is there absolute unrelieved misery; never are vain oblations made. This sense of cheer, which makes the interspersed verse reminiscent of that of Ella Wheeler Wilcox, should give it a large vogue; while the smoothness of the style and the simplicity of the stories can only serve to contribute further to its popularity.

MYSTERY OF GABRIEL

THE MYSTERY OF GABRIEL. By Michael Wood. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.40 net.

THIS is a story of unusual quality. It ignores altogether the ruling passion, being concerned with the reactions of a soul obsessed by the consciousness of an unknown and probably disgraceful heredity. As a psychological study it is both subtle and powerful, though it leaves the reader somewhat disappointed when the heart of the mystery is plucked out. He feels that the wild storms of passion which from time to time engulfed the hero are out of all proportion to their cause, to be accounted for only by madness itself.

A baby a few hours old, with no clothing but a piece of red flannel, was found in a ditch by a noble young woman, whose life had been, in various ways, narrowed and blighted. She took the baby to her lonely heart, had him baptised by the masculine equivalent of her mother's name and by her own surname, and was henceforth his mother in all that makes motherhood sacred. The child grew up, docile, courteous, graceful, but strangely reticent, every thought and feeling as close-folded as the petals of an unopened rose. Moreover, his teachers declared that they discerned in him an indefinable, inexplicable influence for evil. As he grew into manhood he apparently ceased to love his adoptive mother, and once, as he looked at her, an expression of hatred was surprised upon his countenance. His great gift was for music, and there were times when his violin broke from strains of melodic ecstacy into sounds which might have issued from the pit of lost souls. Yet none could accuse him of even the too common divagations of youth. His life was lived in the open, honorable and clean; punctiliously dutiful to his "mother"; courteous, even affable—but always with his real self under lock and key, save when it escaped through his music. What was his secret? That was never revealed until he came under the influence of Father Standish of Brent, and of Brent's most profound penitent. The revelation and its results must be sought in the pages of the book itself.

Readers of Mr. Wood's former volumes know how thoroughly they are penetrated with the beauty and mysticism of the Catholic element in the Church of England. The same atmosphere pervades the closing chapters of "The Mystery of Gabriel." The plain-minded reader cannot always follow the author, but there are many passages which, especially in these days of strain and stress, are worth remembering, and, as Gabriel says, "living by." A well-written, finely felt book, it is one to be commended, albeit its portrayal of an abnormal character makes it fall short of being "a criticism of life."

THE ABANDONED ROOM

THE ABANDONED ROOM. By Wadsworth Camp. Illustrated. Doubleday, Page & Co. $1.35 net.

MR. CAMP'S new mystery story is one of those tales which keep the reader on the alert, leading him on from one apparently inexplicable occurrence to another, and leave him in the end with a feeling of mingled disappointment and annoyance. For the solution is not very convincing or satisfactory, and one exceedingly important fact, the one indeed on which the whole affair turns, is concealed until the very end. It was by discovering this fact that the person who found out the truth was able to achieve that desired result.

In "The Abandoned Room" at the Cedars the old family home of the Blackburns, two mysterious murders are committed. The first is the assassination of old Silas Blackburn, who is found dead in the bed on which several of his ancestors had died. The doors of the room were locked on the inside, so that one of them had to be broken down, and the only unfastened window was completely inaccessible, so inaccessible that even an orang-utan could not have reached it. Circumstances and the general knowledge that Silas Blackburn was about to make a will disinheriting him point to his grandson, Bobby Blackburn, as the probable criminal. And, to complicate the matter still more, Bobby himself does not know where he spent the greater part of the night during which Silas Blackburn was killed, does not know whether he is in truth innocent or guilty. Bobby's cousin and Silas Blackburn's niece, Katherine Perrine, who lived at the Cedars and heard the mysterious noise which preceded both murders, his two friends, Hartley Graham and Carlos Paredes of Panama, a doctor who believes in ghosts, a beautiful South American dancer, an old butler, and several detectives make up the rest of the dramatis personæ. And there is scarcely one among them who is not at some time or other an object of suspicion.

SLAVES OF THE LAMP

SLAVES OF THE LAMP. By George Bronson-Howard. Illustrated. W. J. Watt & Co. $1.35 net.

NOT genii, but smokers of opium, are the "Slaves of the Lamp" about whom Mr. Bronson-Howard writes, and the book centres about the traffic in opium. This is a theme with which the author has already dealt in his interesting and notable novel, "God's Man," but it was there treated in a very different way. For "Slaves of the Lamp" is a romantic adventure story of the "thriller" type, effective and ingenious, though a trifle old-fashioned with its "malefactors of great wealth" who employ thugs and pickpockets, and its thoroughly corrupt New York police force.

The plot is principally concerned with a secret formula for the manufacture of an especially agreeable kind of smoking opium called "Shandoo." When the Chinese Government decided to stamp out the opium traffic all the persons who knew this formula were executed and all the copies of it destroyed save one. That one was engraved on a set of four jade plates, to all appearances exactly alike, though in truth three of them bore information of comparatively little importance, and the fourth the crux of the formula. They were all sent to America and there fell into the hands of four different persons, no one of whom knew anything about the secret. But there were two men who did know it and therefore wanted those plates. One of the two was Philip Hurrish, wholesale poisoner, a millionaire whose "factory and wholesale drug supply corporation furnished cocaine, morphine, and a sirupy opium paste * * * with labels upon them that described them as "cough sirups," "universal panaces," and so forth; the other was Yorke Norroy, Secret Service agent of the United States Government. One wanted the secret that he might spread poison broadcast; the other that he might destroy it. And so these two fought a duel for the possession of the plates, a duel in which Secret Service agents and criminals, a pretty young actress and a burglar of high ideals and chivalrous behavior, a millionaire as vicious though not as clever as Philip Hurrish himself, and an $18-a-week clerk with aristocratic ambitions and a taste for romance, a Russian woman nicknamed the "Red Madonna," and a worthy descendant of an old Knickerbocker family, all played minor parts with more or less energy and discretion. Opening in China, the story shifts to New York, thence to London and back again, through opium joints, country houses and Fifth Avenue and Mayfair mansions. There are kidnappings and hold-ups, plots and counterplots without number. The story, in short, is entertaining, with plenty of twists and surprises, and it is also a good deal better written than are the majority of its kind.

THE SAFETY CURTAIN

THE SAFETY CURTAIN. By Ethel M. Dell. With frontispiece. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50 net.

OF the five tales which make up this volume, four are such long short stories that they are practically novelettes. Three of them have to do with a husband and wife who are estranged and presently united, the tale ending with their mutual understanding, while the fourth, "The Safety Curtain," which gives its title to the volume, differs from the rest only in that it does not end with the discovery that the two really love each other devotedly. It tells of two who married on impulse, went through a period, on the man's part, at least, of doubt and pain, and then when their happiness seemed to be secured, found that it was in truth more greatly endangered than ever. This similarity of theme renders the book, as a book, somewhat monotonous, though the stories are fairly entertaining in themselves, if rather stereotyped.

The first is the rather hectic tale of a man who married the marvelous dancer he had rescued from a fire in a theatre, and took her with him to India. Of her past, though he suspected something, he knew nothing, and he adored her. They had a somewhat strenuous time, but when the truth was finally revealed he sympathized with her and loved her more than ever, and of course it all came out right in the end. The next tale, called "The Experiment," tells of an extraordinarily silly girl who became engaged as an experiment, found herself obliged to marry a man of whom she was a good deal afraid, and presently acquired a small amount of sense—which she certainly needed very badly. The one short story "Those Who Wait" follows. Then comes the story of a penniless girl who married for a home, making a bargain which the man in the case found himself unable to keep, and saving her happiness only at "The Eleventh Hour." "The Place of Honor," which gives the history of how a man of forty married a nineteen-year-old girl and brought her to India, where he tried to make her happy at any

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

MY HOME ON THE FIELD OF MERCY. By Frances Wilson Huard. Illustrated by Charles Huard, Official Painter of the War to the Sixth Army of France. George H. Doran Company. $1.35.

MME. HUARD'S first book met with the enthusiasm it deserved, for it was a picture of the flight of a French settlement before the onrush of the German hordes was permanently checked and finally thrust back at the Marne that struck a note of human interest, of poignant reality which only one who had personally experienced the tragic adventure could possibly have struck. Only one, moreover, whose quick sympathy, interest in people about her, and capacity to put into words what she saw and felt could have made her readers partners with her in those days of terror and courage and suffering.

Now Mme. Huard takes up the story where she dropped it, relating how she and her few assistants tackled the tremendous job of cleaning up after the Germans, and of turning what was left of the chateau into a hospital. How the sick and wounded began coming in and how they were taken care of, healed, amused, humored, set to work according to their capacity; this and much more makes up a book that is breathlessly interesting, full of fun, in spite of all the danger and the tragedy, lightened with the most delicious pen pictures of the French poilu in all sorts of situations, and of the Frenchwoman, fit companion to the heroic men of that superb nation.

One chapter tells of the author's sensations under fire, or rather it relates what she saw and did during the bombardment in Soissons. The same serenity that marked her flight during the retreat, an unconscious, temperamental serenity, shows itself here:

> What a mad dash we made to reach the college. The shriek of shot and screeching of projectiles as they passed none too far above us, made it impossible to hold one's head erect. Shrapnel pattered like rain upon the roofs, while without the slightest warning shutters and chimneys would disintegrate and fall into the street before us, blinding us with the debris. As each new detonation announced the departure of a heavy shell we would flatten ourselves against a wall, clinging there in terror until a few seconds later we realized that our last moment had not come.
> There is a picture. And here, to pursue the trail:
> The courtyard in the college presented a wild scene of animation. A shell had just fallen in the very centre, smashing an ambulance * * * on every side other cars were backed up and being filled with white-faced wounded men * * * Mme. Macherez looked worried, and indeed there was cause. I almost regretted having come, for my presence had only added to her anxiety.

Isn't that delightful? Almost regretted! Mme. Huard was there to get tobacco for her "blessés," and naturally she did not really regret a trifle like reaching Soissons while the enemy guns were smashing the place with shell and bomb. A little later Mme. Huard says:

> As we stood there neither of us spoke, and the roar of battle even drowned our thoughts. I feel certain, however, that neither she nor I had the slightest fear. We were merely anxious to accomplish our tasks as rapidly as possible.

Back once more in her Home of Mercy, she found that her patients were almost crazed at the sound of the guns, and all night through she and the nurse worked over the men, soothing and stilling them, while the guns thundered.

The book is crowded with vivid scenes like these. And the characters. There is M. Cru, for instance, who misses the good food of kindlier days.

> "What's the use of talking about it all," he groans. "This war has completely ruined my digestion. I'll never be the same again * * * you understand, Madame, you are in the trenches, you are hungry, the dinner is late coming. You just get nicely started, when Bing! another attack. By the time you get back your food is cold. The only day we were lucky enough to have chicken a fourlinch shell burst right over us. Killed two and wounded two more. You can say what you like, but a thing like that takes your appetite away * * * Ah, war is wonderful, but it does change one's habits so! At home my wife used to bring me my chocolate in bed.

But there are grimmer scenes in the little hospital. There is the night when the first consignment of typhoid patients must be cared for; they had arrived in army carts, and when these were halted, and the curtains drawn aside, > they remained motionless on their seats—poor human wrecks—not a sound from any mouth, not a smile on any lips—the vacant stare in their eyes betokening their total submission to the malady that had gripped them.

> Here were men come to us in November with typhoid already developed to its worst stages, and before we could even take their temperature it was necessary to remove with pincers the underclothing they had put on before the battle of the Marne.

Forty men had arrived, and it was late at night before each had been thus treated, bathed, and put into the waiting beds, to receive the medical inspection. Afterward came the long hours of vigil, when the patients, all practically out of their minds, called on names of loved ones with agonizing iteration, demanded water, shrieked commands for charges, sang snatches of song, or wildly struggled to be up and away. What a night—and only one of many. But that first night was almost too much for the chatelaine. The booming of the distant guns, the shrieks and groans and mutterings of the sick men, the apparition of one who would not be quieted, but wandered ghostlike, silent, these suddenly struck at her spirit, and for once she was afraid. But it was only for a moment.

It is a book worth having written and deeply worth the reading. The illustrations by Charles Huard are exquisite drawings, vignettes of battle scenes, characters in the story, visions of France as she looks today. It would be easy to go on quoting from the pages indefinitely; hardly one but calls for it. There is the unforgettable story of the little girl child mad with a terrible, remembered experience, shrieking at sight of any man, a little, tiny creature—we recommend that simple impression to the reading of the pacifists. But the whole book will be read by many, for it is the very stuff of human life under the great stress of war, and whoever comes across it will urge its reading upon others.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY: The Polyglot Empire. By Wolf von Schierbrand, Ph. D., LL. D. With a map in colors. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. $3.

ONE of the most interesting chapters in this book is the one telling "How the Dual Monarchy Became What It Is." While the facts therein set forth can be found in any history, they are offered here in an interesting, anecdotal way that gives value not only to this particular chapter, but to the whole volume.

The author knew the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, whose tragic death was at least the ostensible original cause of the present stupendous war, and says of him:

> Francis Ferdinand had both the brains and the energy needed for the rejuvenation of the country. Personally he was not what might be called a pleasant sort of man. He was taciturn, rather rough and aggressive in his bearing, and a rigid disciplinarian, an out-and-out martinet in his official relations. * * * I have heard stories about Francis Ferdinand, told me by persons in his immediate service, which explained his pronounced unpopularity with the masses; stories revealing him in a decidedly unamiable light—severe, harsh. * * * The manner of his death showed what he was. He had been warned of widespread disaffection in the border districts of Bosnia and Herzegovina, of plots hatched to remove him. But he went because he deemed it his duty to do so. And even after the first bomb had been exploded in Serajevo, right under his auto, he was not deterred from carrying out what he had set out to do. He was a man absolutely devoid of fear.

There is a plain-spoken chapter on "The Hapsburgs and their family policy," and several on various aspects of the present war, which altogether give a much better view of the great country under consideration than is likely to be obtained in either the daily press or in the many magazine articles written from a detached standpoint.

The conclusion the author reaches as to the future of Austria-Hungary is undoubtedly the most significant utterance in the whole book. He is convinced that there must be a complete reconciliation of the races living side by side, with all but completa self-government for each national and geographical entity within the borders of Austria-Hungary. Here is his uncompromising summing up:

> If not, I feel sure the whole monarchy will go to pieces, with or without outside help, and this within a very short time. When the war broke out it was probably the general expectation that Austria-Hungary could not withstand and survive the shock. On the contrary, the war, the common danger, has acted as a cement, knitting the whole firmly together. * * * But after the war * * * the internecine strife will be resumed with more ardor than ever—unless there be far-going reconciliation, far-going justice, far-going government by the people; a United States of Austria-Hungary in fact, or something like it.

No one who desires to know the people of Austria-Hungary as they seem to a person of another race with broad sympathies and cultivated human understanding can afford to ignore this instructive and eminently readable volume.

FIGHTING FOR PEACE

FIGHTING FOR PEACE. By Henry van Dyke. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

DR. VAN DYKE last Spring resigned his position as Minister to the Netherlands and Luxemburg, which he had held for four years, in order to be free to come home and write for the enlightenment of his fellow-countrymen of the doings of Germany as he had seen and known them. This book is one of the results of that action. Parts of it have appeared in recent numbers of Scribner's Magazine, but to these he has added chapters on the causes of the war and the kind of peace for which we are fighting. The whole work is written with such nervous strength, single-hearted purpose, and profound feeling as to give it very great driving power and make it a valuable instrument for the bringing of light to those who cannot yet see why we are at war. If it were only possible here in New York to line up all those whose votes for Mr. Hillquit in the recent election meant a protest against our participation in the war and induce them to listen to what Dr. van Dyke says so urgently and cogently, even they would experience some dawnings of doubt as to the intelligence and morality of their present attitude.

There is not much that is new in Dr. van Dyke's account of the coming and the conduct of the war, but what he tells of the things he saw himself—and he saw much—has the interest of personal experience and the weight of personal indictment. There can be no denial, no gainsaying, no explanation by pro-German sympathizers of the descriptions he gives of the scenes in Belgium in the wake of the German invasion and of the condition of the Belgian refugees in whose succoring he aided in Holland. Now and then he contributes a bit of personal observation that is new and interesting, as when he tells of seeing trainloads of German soldiers passing all day long in June, 1914, on the strategic railroad between Cologne and Trier. The latter city, seven miles from the point where the German armies crossed into Luxemburg a few weeks later, he found to be swarming with soldiers while parks of artillery and mountains of munitions and military stores made it "a veritable base of operation, ready for war." He had some curious experiences also with German diplomats who made amazing requests of him. The Austro-Hungarian Legation wanted him to transmit in American code through the American Legation in Belgium to the Austro-Hungarian Legation still lingering in Brussels a message of which the kernel was in the numerical secret cipher of Vienna, which, of course, Dr. van Dyke was unable to read. But he proved less complaisant than Teuton diplomats have found the Swedish Foreign Office and its representatives.

In some of his chapters Dr. van Dyke gives a very complete and forceful résumé of the events that led up to and resulted in the outbreak of the war, that logically point out the German Government as being immediately responsible, and in others he makes a similar and very cogent statement of the events that occasioned our own entrance into the conflict. The final chapter contains a keen analysis and luminous exposition of the conditions which must be fulfilled before this country can talk of peace and of the terms of peace upon which we shall insist.

There are some very interesting pages which tell of the Minister's life in Holland during the months before the war, when he was striving to bring about co-operation among the European Governments for another Peace Conference at The Hague and finding all his efforts nullified by Germany.

Dr. van Dyke expresses much admiration for Queen Wilhelmina as a ruler, thinking her "a woman admirably fit for her task * * * sincere and straightforward, devoted to her duty, and very intelligent in doing it, one of the ablest and sanest crowned heads in Europe, an altogether good ruler for the very democratic country of the Netherlands."

GREENWICH VILLAGE

GREENWICH VILLAGE. By Anna Alice Chapin. With drawings by Allan G. Cram. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $2.50.

THIS is an interesting and attractive book. Greenwich Village is picturesque alike in the past as in the present—something set apart from the rest of New York. The author has studied her subject with care and in detail, and the artist has made charming drawings of the Washington Arch and Milligan Place, of Jefferson Market and old St. John's. The book is pleasing, too, in its binding and general makeup.

In its subject matter, the contents divide themselves sharply in two parts: Greenwich Village of the past and of the present. In her first chapter the author writes of the "checkered history" of Washington Square, and has some little-known contrasts to point. She sketches briefly the history of the "Green Village" ("Greenwich Village," indeed, is sheer tautology,) and tells some fascinating tales of the past—the narrative of Sir Peter Warren, the story of the House on Richmond Hill, (about where the Buterick Building now stands,) the connection of Tom Paine with Greenwich, and some shorter but not less romantic bits of history and biography. She calls up for us, too, those days when the Brevoort was the one famous and fashionable hotel of New York City, and the society of New York flocked to hear great singers at the Academy of Music on Fourteenth Street. It is all a charming tapestry, this bright-woven bit of New York in the past. From it the author turns abruptly—it would be impossible to make the transition in any other way—to the "Latin Quarter" of today.

But in a remoteness, once of geography and now of the spirit, in a sweet and restful quietness in the city's hurly-burly life, in its quality of being "different" and in the love that it has always inspired in those who live there, the Greenwich Village of today does join hands with the Green Village of the far past and the quiet suburb of a somewhat later day. And if we would join history to the present, we can do it in no better way than by quoting, as the author does at her book's beginning, from what Henry James has to say in his novel, "Washington Square":

> I know not whether it is owing to the tenderness of early association, but this portion of New York appears to many persons the most delectable. It has a kind of repose which is not of frequent occurrence in other quarters of the long, shrill city; it has a riper, richer, more honorable look than any of the upper ramifications of the great longitudinal thoroughfare—the look of having had something of a social history.

Of the studio quarter, with its queer little restaurants, its funny shops, its picturesquely clothed denizens, and its much-talked-of "Bohemianism," the author writes fascinatingly. She tells about the strange and delightful eating places, the unconventional villagers; the atmosphere of make-believe that they have thrown over this quarter of crooked streets and artist haunts. She relates some anecdotes that are exceedingly funny and probably characteristic. And she has much that is sensible to say about the "freedom" of "Village" life. She writes of it, in part, as follows:

> There is a great deal of nonsense talked about the wickedness, or at least the impropriety, of Greenwich Village—and some of the talk is by people who ought to know better. The Village is, to be sure, entirely unconventional and incurably romantic and dramatic in its tastes. It is appallingly honest, dangerously young in spirit, and it is rather too intense sometimes, keyed up unduly with ambition and emotion and the eagerness of living. But wicked? Not a bit of it! * * * In the Village there is very little scandal and practically no slander. They are very slow to think evil. And this in spite of their rather ridiculous way of talking. They do, a number of them, give the uninitiated an impression of moral laxity. Their phrases do, when jumbled up sufficiently, make a composite picture of strange and lurid aspect. But actually, they are not one atom less moral than any other group of human beings—in fact, thanks to their unquestionable ideals and their habit of fearless thinking, they are, I think, a good bit more so.
> "While I lived in the village," writes one shrewd man, "I heard of more impropriety and saw less of it than anywhere I've ever been!"

THE FOOD PROBLEM

THE FOOD PROBLEM. By Vernon Kellogg and Alonzo E. Taylor. Preface by Herbert Hoover. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.25.

DRINK AND THE WAR: From the Patriotic Point of View. By Marr Murray. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. 50 cents.

THE food problem is the biggest question, the master problem, that faces the world just now, the thing that most insistently presses itself upon each and all of us individually, and Herbert Hoover is the man upon whom the nation pins its faith to help us solve it. So when we have, as here, a book of modest size and lucid treatment discussing that problem that has the indorsement of Mr. Hoover himself and is written by two of his most trusted lieutenants it surely is one to command attention. The two authors are so well known to be thoroughly versed in their subject that what they say will carry authority the country over. Vernon Kellogg, who has long been a member of the Faculty of Stanford University, was Mr. Hoover's assistant in the work of the Belgian Relief Commission and is now a member of the United States Food Administration. Alonzo E. Taylor of the Faculty of the University of Pennsylvania is also a member of the Food Administration forces and of the Exports Administration Board.

The book is specially remarkable because of its comprehensiveness, the amount of space it covers in its two hundred-odd pages, and for the clarity of its discussion. It is packed full of meat. There is hardly an unnecessary word in it, and certainly not a sentence that does not convey an important fact or make a necessary and luminous explanation. After a brief introductory chapter setting forth the facts to show that the food problem is not our problem alone, but international, binding us closely with all the nations of the world and especially with our allies, the authors consider the character and scope of the problem, the conditions of its solution, the immediate conditions which especially concern us, and, finally, what we are actually doing to meet this master problem of the nations whose solution rests so largely in our hands.

In his preface Mr. Hoover calls attention to the critical importance of not allowing our herds of domestic animals to be depleted. All Europe is cutting into its capital stock of food animals and for years to come will depend on us for animal products. In the face of this fact Mr. Hoover thinks that our present stimulation of grain growing may prove, finally, to have some of the characteristics of a national calamity, and he evidently thinks it would be wise to encourage the production of animals more than has been done, even at the cost of less effort to induce the production of wheat.

The survey of the food situation among all the belligerents which Professors Kellogg and Taylor make is succinct, but comprehensive. One section tells with much detail just what is being done in England, France, and Italy to control food consumption, stimulate its production, and conserve the supply. One chapter, full of interest, takes up the question of food control to Germany and the lessons to be learned from it, and still others describe with detail just what the food situation is as between this country and our allies and what the Food Administration has done and what are its plans for the immediate future. Of very great general interest is the section treating of what the authors call the technology of food, wherein they describe the

DR. RHODES'S HISTORY OF THE CIVIL WAR

HISTORY OF THE CIVIL WAR, 1861-1865. By James Ford Rhodes. With maps. New York: The Macmillan Company. $2.50.

OF all the sections of our brief history as a nation of none is it just now of more profit and value to read than of the anguished years of the civil war. The story of those dark and bitter days comes alive to us now with a poignancy of interest it could never have in times of peace. And there was scarcely a week of the whole four years whose tale of activities and emotions does not hold a lesson for us now of things to be done, dangers to be avoided, tendencies of thought and feeling to be watched and corrected before they become pregnant with menace. Those lessons to be learned are as much the concern of the individual as of groups, of Congress, of the nation as a whole. Even the most determined critic of our national policies and achievement—and every one knows who he is—could now hardly read, with a just mind in the light of today, the tale of the equally determined critics of those days without at least a little chastening of soul.

Therefore this new history of the civil war days is most timely and very welcome. Those who have had the good fortune to become familiar with Dr. Rhodes's monumental "History of the United States from the Compromise of 1850 to the Final Restoration of Home Rule at the South in 1877" know with what a magic pen he writes and with what wide-gathering hands he brings together the materials which he forms into a living mosaic of other days. His method of making ample use of and quotations from the newspapers, pamphlets, reminiscences, and other publications of the time gives an extraordinarily graphic and lively quality to his narrative. It inspires his pages with something of the same thrill and intensity of interest afforded by actual living in the time described. Thomas Bailey Aldrich truly wrote of his seven-volume work: "I was about to say that this history is as absorbing as a play, but I would like to see a play that is half so absorbing."

The necessity of compression in putting the history of the civil war into a single volume has made impossible the extensive use of this method. But the author's notable faculty of summarizing without leaving out the spirit, the life, and the color of events, and the fact that he wrote out of a reservoir of knowledge of just such intimate revelations of the life of the time infuse his narrative with unusual power to re-create the time of which he writes. In his former history three of the volumes deal with the civil war. But since they were published, respectively, in 1895, 1899, and 1904, much new material concerning the war has come to light. Part of it Dr. Rhodes was able to use in his course of lectures on that period at Oxford University four years ago. This new one-volume work is not a condensation of the former three volumes, but an entire rewriting upon the briefer plan after a fresh study of the subject and in the light of the new material.

The story of the campaigns and battles of those four years is one of undying interest to all Americans, on whichever side their ancestors were ranged, or if their ancestors had not yet crossed the seas. But of particular interest just now, and of value also as we face the unfolding crises of the coming months, is a study of the spirit of those days. In the grip of war have we, as a nation, improved or deteriorated? Are we more or less united? Have we more or less fervor of patriotism? Are we handling the big task with more or less efficiency?

Notwithstanding the menace of ill-intentioned enemy aliens, a menace which did not trouble the country in those days, and notwithstanding the pacifist and pro-German Socialist elements, one cannot read Dr. Rhodes's pages with their graphic resurrection of the life of sixty-five years ago without feeling that the United States of today is more united, more fervently patriotic, and far more efficient than was the North of the civil war period. President Lincoln did not have behind him such a united body of helpers as has sprung to the aid of President Wilson from all parts of the country. It is true that today there is much criticism of this, that, and the other phase of war preparations, but in a democracy of free speech that is inevitable and helpful, a sure sign of national health; and it is true, also, that the determined cabal that has long been endeavoring to undermine the position of a member of the Cabinet is still at work and that much partisan feeling manifests itself. But compared with the openly and incessantly voiced distrust of President Lincoln, the intrigues in his own Cabinet against him, the bitter criticisms launched against him by both friends and enemies, the constant nagging and barking of a large portion of the press, the country today stands forth as a remarkably harmonious region.

For a long time "distrust of Lincoln pervaded both the Senate and the House," and in his Cabinet there were intrigues against him; popular uneasiness and severe criticism by public men and newspapers were caused by increasing assumptions of war power by the Government, and it was loudly declared that no Government that once assumed such powers would ever give them up again; as one reverse to the Union arms followed another the popular trust in Lincoln sadly waned; as the months went on and the blockade of the South tightened there was much trading overland with the enemy—a species of peculiarly mean and treacherous disloyalty to which present-day conditions offer no parallel; the menace of the "copperhead" was everywhere, in city, village, and country, east and west; many sympathizers with the South were scattered through the North; the draft riots gleam bloodily in New York City's history, and the fear of similar riots disturbed many States; Horace Greeley, with his mighty personal influence and the weight and wide circulation of his paper, was an ever-present thorn in the Government's side, now demanding that the "erring sisters" be allowed to go in peace, presently urging that a foreign power be asked to mediate between North and South, and again nagging Lincoln to inaugurate proposals for peace, or at least for a year's armistice. These are only a few of the conditions graphically recounted in more or less detail by Dr. Rhodes, which help to induce the conviction that the nation is now better united and inspired by a more general and more fervent patriotism than it was through at least the first three years of the civil war. And as for the efficiency and dispatch with which it is carrying on its preparations for war, the balance falls on the side of the present as promptly and heavily as it does in the matter of thrift and cost.

Even well-intentioned persons can be found at the present time who look with disfavor and apprehension upon the vast powers that are being placed in the hands of the President and his advisers. Dr. Rhodes quotes James Bryce as saying that "Abraham Lincoln wielded more authority than any single Englishman has done since Oliver Cromwell," and adds: "My reading of English history and comparative study of our own have led me to the same conclusion, although it should be added that Cromwell's exercise of arbitrary power greatly exceeded Lincoln's and involved more important infractions of the Constitution of his country. * * * I have not lighted on a single instance in which the President himself directed an arrest, yet he permitted them all; he stands responsible for the casting into prison of citizens of the United States on orders as arbitrary as the lettres de cachet of Louis XIV."

WHY NOT MARRY?

WHY NOT MARRY. Compiled by Anna Steese Richardson. Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company. $1.40.

READERS of this little book of the arresting title will find it pleasantly free from either the professional optimism of the evening paper's heart-to-heart talk or the inflated egotism of the it-pays-to-be-married monologue, although the chapter headings and a modest effort by the publisher's copy-writer on the jacket would seem to justify an anticipation of both. The material originally appeared in editorial form in Pictorial Review, and not a little of it was supplied, as Mrs. Richardson tells us, by men and women readers of the magazine who had learned the secret of successful marriage through actual experience, sad or happy according as they had been unyielding or adaptable. Indeed, it runs the whole gamut of marital experience, from the high cost of courtship to the semi-annual discomfort of house cleaning and the case of pleasure-madness versus mother-love; and, however much the human document as a commercialized product may be fair game for the cynically inclined, there can be no question but that the book will be found of practical help and a source of inspiration by many young women and some of the "ten million young men of marriageable age," the conscientious, the selfish, the falot of heart who wonder with the author of "Virginibus Puerisque" why so many marriages are passably successful.

It is probably to Mrs. Richardson that we owe the timely antidote to the emotional doctrine of the superiority rather than the equality of woman, in the chapter under the suggestive caption, "Give the Devil His Due." What are the aims and tendencies of Feminism? Briefly, Feminism stands for the principles of morals of highest consequence—individual responsibility and self-reliance. It upholds the woman's right to work, indorses her demand for the ballot, advocates the single standard of morality. "But it does not stand for any argument, any movement, scattered or organized, which will bring about sex antagonism and thereby jeopardise the greatest of American institutions—the Home." Today, the writer continues, with novels and dramas of a certain type inflaming the minds and imaginations of good women against men, too many wives are looking for evil in their husbands and too many men are on the defensive, a state of affairs which will never result in sex equality. Truisms are seldom worth quoting, but the following might well be memorized and taken to heart by the propagandists: "Sex equality must grow out of mutual progress, mutual sympathy and understanding, not from the degradation of men that women may shine more brilliantly."

We will agree with the copy-writer that the book is thought-provoking, but it is so not more as an indictment of our national habits of thought on the marital relations than as a demonstration that much which was pertinent and necessary last March seems like misplaced earnestness this November, when we are readjusting our sense of values under the spiritual stress of war. There is less serious hesitation over marriage. "Why not marry while the capacity for living is at its best?" Well, why not?

LIFE AND LETTERS OF RICHARD HARDING DAVIS

ADVENTURES AND LETTERS OF RICHARD HARDING DAVIS. Edited by his brother, Charles Belmont Davis. Illustrated. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50.

WHATEVER place time may give to his work, there is no doubt that Richard Harding Davis was one of the picturesque figures in our modern world of literature—and one who was vitally American. He was still, when he died, comparatively young in years, and he was always young in spirit. And his untimely death took from us one of our best-known and most distinctive personalities. We use the word "picturesque" of Richard Harding Davis with a full sense of the risk of misunderstanding; yet picturesque he was. His characteristic charm of writing, his reputation as a reckless but unconquerable newspaper reporter, the wide and astonishingly early fame of his stories, even his good looks, and certainly his distinguished parentage, and then in later years the aura of dimly guessed adventure that hung, justly, over his world-famous work as a correspondent in many wars—all these made him truly a picturesque personage, gave him a unique place. And in all this he was so strictly American! In all this, and more besides—and there is something of ready symbolism in the mere fact that he was engaged in working for the cause of preparedness on the night before he died.

There are many reasons, therefore, why the life and letters of Richard Harding Davis should be welcomed by a wide public on the mere mention of its appearance. And all these reasons will be intensified and new ones added when the book is read. It is so interesting a book—and it is so fine a book. It has in it the fascinating things that, from reading his stories and articles, we should expect from the author. But it has in it a good deal more than that; it is the picture of a devoted and companionable American family; it is a series of telling glimpses of a tender and "chummy" son, a jolly brother, a loyal friend, at the last of a thoughtful and adoring husband and father; and through it are scattered memorable little comments on all manner of interesting things all over the world.

Richard Harding Davis was born in Philadelphia April 18, 1864, the son of L. Clarke Davis and Rebecca Harding Davis, whom the youngest of the younger generation may or may not remember as a famous editor and a still more famous story teller. From his childhood he intended to write; his brother tells us that he never thought of doing anything else. From his childhood he grew up among the interesting and famous people who were his parents' friends. And from his childhood his parents themselves were the best friends of all. During his last illness, his brother says, his mind reverted constantly to his youth, his life in Philadelphia with his parents and brother and sister; and one night he said: "I know now why we were such a happy family. It was because we were always, all of us, of the same age."

And that may be taken, indeed, as the text for a great part of this book. Most of the letters are written to his parents, and most of the others to his brother and sister. And they are the most companionable and thoughtful letters that can be imagined—and the most interesting. From his school days, through his reportorial experiences, his early successes, the gayeties and adventures of his later life, he wrote to those good chums, his mother and father, all about it. Spontaneous, exuberant, intensely alive, always with the quick visualization of his published work, and in most cases with more of personal comment, these "letters home" are a record of "adventure" that deserves to live in the annals of the American family. Some letters from his parents are included in the book; and they deserve to live, significantly: they are so wise, so good, so free from sentimentality, so sympathetic, and so sane. We commend Richard Harding Davis's letters home, heartily, to sons and daughters and parents. It is interesting to note, too, that the devotion that was so strong and permeating a thing in his relation with his parents he gave in his turn to his own little daughter. Hope Harding Davis was only 15 months old when her father died. But the letters of those fifteen months are literally full of the baby, and, Charles Belmont Davis tells us, in speaking of the little girl's birth, "No event in my brother's life had ever brought him such infinite happiness, and during the fifteen short months that remained to him she was seldom, if ever, from his thoughts, and no father ever planned more carefully for a child's future than Richard did for his little daughter." These last letters for his wife and child are very sweet, and very happy, and very touching.

He was suddenly famous at 26. He "covered" New York, the Middle West, London, the Mediterranean, Paris, Central America, South America, Moscow, Budapest. He went to Cuba in 1896 to write about the rebellion there. In 1897 he went to Greece to "see how the Greeks were faring with their enemies the Turks." In 1898-9 he reported the Spanish-American war—and his letters are full of his poignant distress at the cruel inefficiency in the treatment of our troops. He went to South Africa during the Boer war, and he says, "Winston Churchill and I cried for an hour" over the sheer pathos of the relief of Ladysmith. He "covered" the Spanish and English coronations in the interim between war reporting, and, of course, he was correspondent during the Russo-Japanese war. He went to the Congo in 1903 to investigate the reports of atrocities. He lived for a time in London. And all these busy years he was writing novels, short stories, and plays. In the Spring of 1914 he went to Vera Cruz, and in August he sailed for Europe. Through all these years his letters present an array of delightful, amusing, exciting adventures. The book is excellently edited, with a running narrative that is altogether readable and informative, and the photographs are really vivid illustrations of the matter of the book. We know few books more interesting.

ROYAL RIFLE CORPS

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE KING'S ROYAL RIFLE CORPS, 1755-1915. Compiled and edited by Lieut. Gen. Sir Edward Hutton. Winchester, England: Warren & Son.

For Americans something of a sentimental interest—historically so—attaches to this story of a regiment in the British Army, for it had its birth on this side of the Atlantic and for many years was known as the Sixtieth Royal Americans. Christmas Day, 1755, was its birthday, and it was recruited mainly from settlers in the Colonies of Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and North Carolina. There was need for it in the French and Indian war that was then being waged, because it had been found that the British troops trained upon the German model could not cope with the French and Indian troops under the conditions of warfare in the New World. It adopted at its birth Colonial methods of equipment, simpler drill, open formations, and the Indian system of forest warfare. It helped in the brilliant capture of Fort Duquesne, in 1758, which opened the great West to English enterprise, took a prominent part in the capture of Louisburg, and in the series of engagements terminating in the battle of Quebec it fought so brilliantly as to win from General Wolfe its motto, "Celer et Audax"—Swift and Bold. After the end of the French and Indian wars some of its battalions were disbanded and the others sent to the West Indies. With the opening of the American Revolution, its ranks newly recruited in England, the Sixtieth Royal Americans, but now under their new name, again fought on American soil, against the Colonists.

Its subsequent history has been a brilliant one, for the regiment has fought in all the far-flung wars of Britain—through the years of the Peninsular campaign, when England was trying to drive Napoleon out of Spain and Portugal; in India and Egypt, in the Zulu war and the Boer war, and in the present war it did its share at Mons, the Marne, the Aisne, at Ypres, and Loos and Neuve Chapelle. The story of all this is told briefly but clearly in the little book, with special accounts of the services of the regiment's several battalions. General Hutton draws attention to the fact that the regiment has shown throughout its long career of a hundred and sixty years the qualities of ready initiative, strong individuality, courage, and steady discipline which distinguished its membership when it was first recruited from among the American colonists.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE

FOREIGN EXCHANGE EXPLAINED. By Franklin Escher. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.25.

Now that the period of our exclusiveness is past—as McKinley put it even before the war—foreign exchange has become something which should be understood in its art by all foreign traders and in its science by all students of world affairs. Heretofore it has been neglected, both because of its difficulty and because of our preoccupation in domestic affairs. Hereafter it cannot be neglected either by our bankers or by our merchants. Mr. Escher's volume aptly meets the need of those who wish an introduction to the subject without complication with the technicalities of the more elaborate treatises. His style is what would be expected from one who has long written upon finance and is now a lecturer upon this particular topic at the University of New York. It is popular without being trivial, and clear without the fault of condescension to his readers. Perhaps this is best illustrated in the exposition of exchange arbitrage, or the triangular exchange operation which is the pons asinorum of finance. Those who have been baffled by it in the big books on the subject can hardly help understanding it in Mr. Escher's exposition, and so of the other topics in this timely and increasingly important subject. The jargon of the trade is confusing, no doubt, but with Mr. Escher's help it is a mere trifle to those capable of understanding carburetors, differentials, and other household words.

WINONA

New York Times Review of Books:

May I correct a mistake in the review of my girls' book, "Winona of Camp Kanonya," which I am responsible for? In reviewing it the writer quotes a hiking song:

"I didn't raise my girl to be a camper," supposing (as I do occasionally "drop into poetry") that I wrote it. I didn't. I stole it from a set of camping songs, up at a girls' camp in New Hampshire, where I was three Summers ago. The girls evolved their songs and parodies en masse, so I don't know which of the twenty of them was most responsible for this. But I'm not, I am sorry to say.

WORDS AND NATIONS

WHEN we read that "the French are one of the most ascetic races in the world," we are apt to take the statement as a harmless sort of paradox, lacking the grace of any shadow of plausibility. When we learn that the statement is made by Mrs. WHARTON, there is nothing left for us but a revision, as seemly as possible, of our preconceived ideas of France and the French character. For, from what Mrs. WHARTON has already written, together with her long residence in France, and the vital part she has taken in the affairs of that country ever since the war started, it is doubtful if there is any one—at least among American writers—more competent than she to interpret the French to us. Her absorbing article on "The French as Seen by an American," in the December number of Scribner's Magazine, from which the above quotation is taken, is, indeed, a proof, if proof is needed, of her extraordinary gift of analysis. The war has already revised the national estimate of France. Long ago we found that the traditional view of that nation was hardly compatible with the heroism, the calm, unswerving determination, displayed by a people the world, in its ignorance, was wont to call "volatile." Of course, we know now that the French are not volatile, and—if we would be logical—that the word never could have denoted a characteristic quality in them. War brings out the latent, underlying traits of a man or a people; it rarely creates something that did not exist before.

SO it is that Mrs. WHARTON reveals the French not only as they are today, but as they always have been. Her study is based not on her own observations—these are used in corroboration—but on a sort of historical analysis in which certain words in frequent use in French are found to have a vital significance in the interpretation of national character:

> The French people are one of the most ascetic and the most laborious in Europe, yet the four words that preponderate in French speech and literature are: Glory, love, voluptuousness, and pleasure. Before the Puritan reflex causes the reader to fling aside the page polluted by this statement, it will be worth his while to translate these four words into la gloire, l'amour, la volupté, le plaisir, and then (if he knows French and the French well enough) consider what they mean in the language of CORNEILLE and PASCAL. For it must be understood that they have no equivalents in the English consciousness, and that, if it were sought to explain the fundamental difference between the exiles of the Mayflower and the conquerors of Valmy and Jéna, it would probably best be illustrated by the totally different significance of "love and glory" and "amour et gloire."

In her study of the meaning that usage has given to these words Mrs. WHARTON finds that they are really quite untranslatable by their nominal English equivalents. Thus, by "la gloire," the French "mean something infinitely larger, deeper, and subtler than we mean by 'glory.'" In the French conception of glory "the sense of duty has a large part." So with "love":

> "Amour," to the French, means the undivided total of the complex sensations and emotions that a man and a woman may inspire in each other; whereas "love," since the days of the Elizabethans, has never, to Anglo-Saxons, been more than two halves of a word—one half all purity and poetry, the other all prurience and prose. And gradually the latter half has been discarded, as too unworthy of association with the loftier meanings of the word, and "love" remains—at least in the press and in the household—a relation as innocuous, and as undisturbing to social conventions and business routine as the tamest ties of consanguinity.

"Volupté," again, is not the equivalent of our "voluptuousness," but "means the intangible charm that imagination extracts from things tangible." Finally, the French "plaisir" is quite different from our "pleasure":

> "Le plaisir" stands for the frankly permitted, the freely taken, delight of the senses, the direct enjoyment of the fruit of the tree called golden. No suggestions of furtive vice degrade or coarsen it, because it has, like love, its open place in speech and practice.

It is a fascinating study, this, that finds the words used by a nation the criteria of national character. Mrs. WHARTON'S employment of this method furnishes an excellent essay on some of the niceties of French speech and literature that are not always appreciated by Anglo-Saxon students of the language. But it does more than this. It gives an indication of some of the strong, sterling elements that are inherent in the French temperament and make of the people the heroic nation revealed to the world in the glorious annals of the last three years.

OF literary activity in France today one hears very little, at least in this country. Only rarely do we see nowadays those familiar, yellow-paper-bound duodecimos, in which contemporary novels or even popular reprints were wont to appear in such numbers years ago. Publications of this character have undoubtedly decreased in quantity in France, as they have elsewhere. It goes without saying, also, that just now only a small proportion of the books published find their way to this country. Those that do reach us are, as a rule, "war books." But it appears, judging from an article on "Wartime Literature in France," published in the current number of The Bookseller, Newsdealer, and Stationer, that there is no lack of activity among the French makers and writers of books just now. As many of the best known authors are either at the front, or engaged in some form of war work, their writing does not follow the lines either in style or theme that it does in normal times. Much of it appears in newspaper articles—and these articles are usually collected and brought out in book form when they are sufficient in number for that kind of publication. Apparently there is not much fiction being published, but poetry seems to be particularly popular:

> Of course, there has been produced in France during the past months a great deal of war poetry, to which the poets in view have contributed their share. But little of what has come from these veteran bards has been notable, unless we except some of the fugitive pieces of M. EDMONU ROSTAND. In the trenches and the sick beds of the military hospitals has been written, however, much verse worthy of attention, not so much on account of its intrinsic merit as poetry as because of the spirit which pervades it and which reveals what is likely to be the mood of the song which is to follow this dreadful catastrophe.

One of the leading French poets of the day, PAUL FORT, the "Prince of Poets," as he is called, makes this interesting forecast of the French poetry of the future:

> My own opinion is that, after the war, lyricism, not only in France but throughout the world, will take on a more popular tone, will become, so to speak, more naturalistic, and yet remain nearer to the true voice of the soul, which should be deep love and deep pity for mankind. Many of our poets will have known the trenches and some will have had born to them there the gift of song. They will sing of the fatal misery of the world and of the tragic hope that in better times poetry will become human. FRANÇOIS VILLON and SHAKESPEARE will be looked up to as the grand masters of the art; and then the poetry which is of dreams, beautiful though it be, will be put aside, at least in part, and so too will be excluded—and this will be an unmixed good—the poetry which is too artificial, empty-hearted, too Byzantine, that is trivial when one should be serious. Then, too, we will see WALT WHITMAN'S influence increase considerably, and KIPLING'S and PAUL CLAUDEL'S also.

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORY OF AMERICAN LITERATURE

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORY OF AMERICAN LITERATURE. Edited by William Peterfield Trent, M. A., LL. D., Professor of English, Columbia University; John Erskine, Ph. D., Professor of English, Columbia University; Stuart P. Sherman, Ph. D., Professor of English, University of Illinois, and Carl Van Doren, Ph. D., Head Master of the Brearley School. In three volumes. Volume I. Colonial and Revolutionary Literature; Early National Literature; Part I. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.50.

FOLLOWING the general lines of the great "Cambridge History of English Literature," the "Cambridge History of American Literature" offers the first of its three volumes to the public—a valuable, comprehensive, and from beginning to end a most interesting book. It is important to note at the outset that the "Cambridge History" of our literature purposes to survey the life of the American people as expressed in their writings—it will not be merely a study of belles-lettres or even of outstanding greatness. Certain other distinctive aims and features the editors also outline. The book is on a larger scale than any of its predecessors which have carried the story of colonial times to the present generation; it is the first history of American literature composed with the collaboration of a numerous body of scholars from every section of the United States and from Canada; and it will provide for the first time an extensive bibliography for all periods and subjects treated.

In making any general résumé of the purposes of the history as a whole, and especially in introducing the first volume, emphasis must be laid upon the care and detail which the authors and editors have devoted to the early literature of our land. In the editors' preface this is mentioned:

> The "Cambridge History" marks a partial reversion to the position of the earlier historians, who looked into the past with interest and into the present and future not without hope. * * * We have made it our primary purpose to represent adequately as time allowed the periods of our national past, and to restore the memory of writers who are neglected because they are forgotten and because they are no longer sympathetically understood. To write the intellectual history of America from the modern aesthetic standpoint is to miss precisely what makes it significant among modern literatures, namely, that for two centuries the main energy of Americans went into exploration, settlement, labor for subsistence, religion, and statecraft. For nearly two hundred years a people with the same traditions and with the same intellectual capacities as their contemporaries across the sea found themselves obliged to dispense for the most part with art for art. But the long inhibition and belated expansion of their purely aesthetic impulses, unfavorable as it was to the development of poetry and fiction, was no serious handicap to the production of a prose competently recording their practical activities and expressing their moral, religious, and political ideas. Acquaintance with the written record of these two centuries should enlarge the spirit of American literary criticism, and render it more energetic and masculine. * * * When our American criticism treats its facile novelist and poet-masters as they deserve, and heartily recognizes and values the works in which the maturest and wisest Americans have expressed themselves, its references to the period prior to 1800 will be less apologetic.

The first writings of and from America were, of course, the records of the explorers and settlers. The first historian in the British colonies was Captain John Smith. And to quote George Parker Winship, A. M., Librarian of the Harry Elkins Widener Collection, Harvard University, and author of the first chapter of the Cambridge history, "Travelers and Explorers, 1583-1763": "He may have been, as it was once the fashion to proclaim, an inordinate liar, but whatever the historians say, the certain fact is that what he wrote was read in his own day and has been read since by thousands who have identified him with the first English colony." The chapter on "Historians, 1607-1783," is by John Spencer Bassett, Ph. D., Professor of American history in Smith College. This is followed by "The Puritan Divines, 1620-1720," by Vernon Louis Partington, A. M., Professor of English in the University of Washington, and "Edwards," by Paul Elmer More, A. M., LL. D., after which Woodbridge Riley, Ph. D., Professor of Philosophy in Vassar College, contributes the chapter on "Philosophers and Divines, 1720-1783."

It is in line with the reminder expressed in the paragraph we have quoted from the editors' preface, that fine as is this volume throughout, especially good as are the chapters on Irving, by Major George Haven Putnam, and Cooper, by Dr. Van Doren, the most interesting single things in the book are the study of the New England divines and philosophers from the Puritans to the Transcendentalists, and the chapter on Franklin. Fascinating as the illuminating record of Franklin is, the long development of religious thought in New England is the more significant. We use the word "religious" with the widest possible connotations, to include theological controversy and philosophical community-founding. But whatever we call it, it is the outstanding development in the early years of the history of American thought, and the outstanding feature in this volume's subject matter. It is taken up here with the utmost—and the most readable—detail, the lives and work of the early Puritan divines set forth and differentiated, the controversies of a somewhat later day closely studied, transcendentalism treated in a noble chapter by Harold Clark Goddard, Ph. D., Professor of English in Swarthmore College, and a brief and excellent chapter on Emerson, by Paul Elmer More, bringing the present volume to a close. We lack space even to refer to the lives and writings and philosophies so carefully and interestingly traced; we can only say how valuable the chapters are. But for a summary of development and significance, we quote Dr. Goddard, who, after his notable chapter on what transcendentalism was and what it was not, together with its relation to European philosophies, concludes:

> These men were no mere dreamers. * * * When put to the test of acting up to their principles they were not found wanting. The Puritan character was the rock on which transcendentalism, was built.
> How inherent in the religious development of New England that character has been may be seen by glancing at three of her foremost spiritual figures: Jonathan Edwards, Ralph Waldo Emerson, and William James. (James, curiously enough, though a New Englander only by adoption, being scarcely less representative of the most recent phase of New England religious evolution than Emerson and Edwards were of two of its earlier stages.) Edwards, the last great apostle of theocratic dogmatism; Emerson, the prophet of a generation of romantic aspiration; James, the pragmatic philosopher of a scientific and democratic age—how far apart, at first thought, they seem! * * * And yet, under analysis, such distinctions turn out to be partly nominal and relatively superficial, for, deeper than all their differences of doctrine, there is a community of spirit among these men, a something central and controlling in them all, something which in its day was the driving force of transcendentalism, the innate idealism and individualism of the New England mind.

We have called attention to the exceedingly interesting chapter on Franklin, which was written by Stuart P. Sherman, Ph. D., Professor of English in the University of Illinois. Another detailed personal study is that of Bryant, by William Ellery Leonard, Ph. D., Assistant Professor of English in the University of Wisconsin, who also writes of the minor poets of that day. The other divisions of the first book are "Colonial Newspapers and Magazines, 1704-1775," by Elizabeth Christine Cook, Ph. D., Instructor in English in Teachers College; "American Political Writing, 1760-1789," by William MacDonald, Ph. D., Professor of History in Brown University, and "The Beginnings of Verse, 1610-1808," by Samuel Marion Tucker, Ph. D., Professor of English in the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute. Of Book II., "Early National Literature," only Part I. (less than half) is contained in this volume. The chapters, in addition to those we have named above, are "Travelers and Observers, 1763-1846," by Lane Cooper, Ph. D., Professor of English in Cornell University; "The Early Drama, 1756-1800," by Arthur Hobson Quinn, Dean of the College, University of Pennsylvania; "Early Essayists," by George Frisbie Whicher, Ph. D., Associate Professor of English, Amherst College, and "Fiction," in two chapters, by Dr. Van Doren.

To point out the notable excellence of the work as a whole and the several chapters in particular partakes of the nature of tautology. Its value goes without saying. Its interest, to the mere "lay reader," is almost as great. But since the second part, covering so rich a period in our literature, stops off, so to speak, in the middle, it is to be regretted that some general outline could not have been included in the preface, to make less bald the omission from the present volume of those internationally important figures, Hawthorne, Whitman, and Poe. It is probably inevitable, too, that in a detailed study of the beginnings of a literature, the consideration of a more crowded period should seem to suffer omissions by comparison, and we cannot avoid noticing, when every little political and patriotic verse, apparently, that antedates 1808 is mentioned, the utter ignoring of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and "The Star-Spangled Banner." But these omissions and arrangements are little things. "The Cambridge History of American Literature" is a book of the utmost importance.

COMPENSATION INSURANCE

LIABILITY AND COMPENSATION INSURANCE. By Ralph B. Blanchard. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $2.

It is expected that twenty billions of insurance will be applied for by our army against the Huns. No one knows how many soldiers there will be, nor how many casualties, yet the law provides for the leap in the dark. In that case expense is truly no object, and there are costs saved. In somewhat similar manner the States have plunged into the experiment of regulating the liability of employers for industrial accidents to their employes. The movement began only six years ago, and already thirty-four States and Territories have passed laws upon the subject, each according to its individual fancy, and none with any basis for calculating the risk. Mr. Blanchard has done good work in assembling these laws for purpose of comparison, and discussion of their likenesses and differences. In that way the principles underlying this humane method of distributing the burden of industrial casualties may be discovered and applied for the sake of reducing the risks and preventing the wreck of a good idea on bad practice. Foreign practice also is considered, and, all together, the subject is presented both broadly and well. The point is not shirked that the subject in some aspects is controversial. In such cases both sides are presented, as the author's intention is to give information rather than judgment. The book may be commended both to the general reader and to students of the subject with the view of either making, administering, practicing, or benefiting by the law.

BOOKS THAT DISCUSS THE SOUL'S IMMORTALITY

THE LIGHT BEYOND. By Maurice Maeterlinck. Translated by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $2.

THE DEAD HAVE NEVER DIED. By Edward C. Randall. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. $1.50.

THE ADVENTURE BEAUTIFUL. By Lilian Whiting. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. $1.

IN the sixteen essays bound together under the general caption of "The Light Beyond," we have a fairly full presentation of the attitude of one of the boldest and yet most liberal thinkers of the day toward the greatest mystery, that faces humankind—a mystery that the world has ever sought to solve since the beginning of earthly time. After this life, what? The conviction set forth in "The Bluebird," that a man can not die so long as he lives in the memory of his friends, is the keynote of all that Maeterlinck has written in later years, and of which the cream is given in this volume. The present war, in which, as a Belgian, so many of Maurice Maeterlinck's own people have been suddenly stricken, has caused him to approach the arch enigma anew in a splendor of indignation and pity. Too frank and sincere a philosopher to assume that he can answer with finality a question which has defied the ages, he contents himself with reviewing the evidence pro and con as he sees it, leaving deductions to those who read. Mystic as he is, it is natural that he should regard what we call death merely as an evolution, rather than as the tragedy it appears to so many. Incidentally he treats it in various aspects that lead the reader into new and illuminating trends of thought. For example, in the leading essay in the book, "Our Injustice to Death," he says:

> Is it surprising that the idea of death, which should be the most perfect and the most luminous of ideas being the most persistent and the most inevitable—remains the flimsiest and the only one that is a laggard? * * * To fathom its abysses, we wait until the most enfeebled, the most disordered moments of our life arrive. We do not begin to think of death until we have no longer the strength, I will not say, to think, but even to breathe. * * * Let us learn to look upon death as it is in itself, free from the horrors of matter and stripped of the terrors of the imagination. Let us first get rid of all that goes before and does not belong to it. Thus we impute to it the tortures of the last illness, and that is not just. Illnesses have nothing in common with that which ends them. They form part of life, and not of death. We readily forget the most cruel sufferings that restore us to health, and the first sun of convalescence destroys the most unbearable memories of the chamber of pain. But let death come, and at once we overwhelm it with all the evil done before. Not a tear but is remembered and used as a reproach, not a cry of pain but becomes a cry of accusation. Death alone bears the weight of the errors of nature or the ignorance of science that have uselessly prolonged torments in whose name we curse death because it puts a term to them.

As might be inferred from the cynical dictum closing the above quotation from his book, Maeterlinck takes the affirmative in the controversy which of late years has become more and more bitter as to whether it is or is not the merciful duty of a physician to end prematurely a life that cannot be saved. He repeats what often has been said by others, that "all doctors consider it their first duty to prolong to the uttermost even the cruelest pangs of the most hopeless agony." His summing up of the question is thus expressed:

> A day will come when science will turn upon its error and no longer hesitate to shorten our woes. A day will come when it will dare and act with certainty; when life, grown wiser, will depart silently at its hour, knowing that it has reached its term, even as it withdraws silently every evening, knowing that its task is done. * * * There will be no physical nor meta-physical reason why the advent of death should not be as salutary as sleep.

In a chapter on "Communications with the Dead," Maeterlinck contents himself with reviewing briefly the mediumistic work done by such eminent students of psychic philosophy as F. W. H. Myers, Richard Hodgson, Professor Newbold, Sir Oliver Lodge, and William James, all of whom worked with the well-known Mrs. Pipee, with astonishing results. Maeterlinck concludes, from the manifestations thus obtained, that "it is precisely the accumulation and coincidences of these abnormal details which gradually produce and confirm the conviction that we are in the presence of an entirely new, improbable, but genuine phenomenon, which is sometimes difficult of classification among exclusively terrestrial phenomena."

There is much more in this volume which offers an almost irresistible temptation to quote. But it is possible here only to say that a more comprehensive, authoritative consideration of the greatest problem that can confront the human mind has never been written than will be found in this work by one of the most broad-minded, most human philosophers of his period. A mark of his genius is found in the fact that, although his subject is on its face a weighty one, there is nothing to warrant the reproach of "heaviness" in the whole book.

"The Dead Have Never Died," by Edward C. Randall, is frankly a recapitulation of "manifestations" from those who have "passed over" and readered in the usual manner, through a medium whose vibrations are attuned to those of some belag in the after life, enabling the spirit to make his presence known by human speech. The author goes further than this, however. He has given twenty years to psychical research, he tells us, and it is from this experience that he declares his conviction that there is no death, but that when at the end of a short span we separate from the flesh garment we have worn we take on an "etheric body," with power to think and function as in earth life. On the authority of one who is now in the after life, as given to us through a medium, the region in which those who have passed over live is very much like the world we know, where "the noble and sublime sciences of astronomy, chemistry, and mathematics engage a considerable portion of our attention and afford us an inexhaustible subject for study and reflection."

The author of this volume is a lawyer, and his literary style indicates that he is a man of sound education. It is this that makes his declarations more impressive than many less scholarly works on the great phenomena of this life and the next. He believes that it is possible to communicate with the dead, since he is sure that he has heard the voices of those whom he knows have "gone over." Notwithstanding that he commands the respect due to thoughtful and earnest assertions, one cannot help wishing that the spirits would not trouble their "control" with the discussion of trivial earthly matters that in this life they would presumably have passed over as too unimportant to be worthy a second thought. But that is an old objection. The only excuse for its being mentioned now is that it is rather out of tune with the seriousness of the book as a whole. Whether "The Dead Have Never Died" really throws new light on the great mystery is a question, but certainly it is a grippingly interesting work.

In "The Adventure Beautiful" Miss Lilian Whiting has collected in a neat volume nine of her always charming essays dealing more or less with the spiritual, unseen and beautiful. The frontispiece, a reproduction of G. F. Watt's "Happy Warrior," creates a mystic and poetic atmosphere which pervades the whole work. The opening contribution, which gives a name to the book, takes for its text the words of Charles Frohman, when he awaited death on the deck of the sinking Lusitania: "Why fear death? Death is the most beautiful adventure in life." Miss Whiting, with a calmness of judgment that gives added strength to her words, sets forth that revealed religion, through Jesus Christ, is quite in harmony with the revelations of psychical research. She shows this by examples, as well as through pure logic, and one can hardly lay down her book without feeling more hopeful of happiness in the world beyond. She is not content with the experiences of others, either. She tells of some of her own, and, as they are laid before the reader, in the beautiful fiction that is so characteristic of this gifted writer, he is bound to accept them, and to feel grateful to the author for the comfort they bring. An excerpt from the first essay in her volume well sets forth her views, all the more valuable because they are those of one who evidently believes in the teachings of the Scriptures. She says:

> The movement known as Spiritualism is, in its highest interpretation, inseparably connected with religious life. Its earliest records are to be sought in the Bible. * * * If it is objected that if God had intended man to know anything of the life beyond and our present relation to it, He would have revealed it to us, the answer may be that to an extent He has revealed it to us in the Bible, which is a very repository of records of psychic phenomena; and also that the same objection might be applied to any branch of science.

Like the other two writers whose books are reviewed herewith, Miss Whiting feels that the question of what comes after this life has taken on a more intense interest than ever at this time, when millions of men have been hurried to a violent death on the battlefields of Europe.

BRAHMADARSANAM

BRAHMADARSANAM, OR INTUITION OF THE ABSOLUTE. By Sri Ananda Acharya. The Macmillan Company. $1.85.

Sri Ananda Acharya is an excellent writer. He has a faculty for making the most abstract and profound subject absorbing and entertaining. In his book the different cults of India are explained in a graphic and large sense. His method is direct, concise, yet vivid and human. He gives one the meaning and teaching of the Yogi philosophy, the Vedanta, Gotama, and others, in a striking way.

For instance, this sentence is typical:

> India has been justly regarded as the home of philosophy and religion. From the earliest times Indian thinkers have felt the necessity of basing religion upon philosophy, and of building society upon religion.

Again he says:

> I think that the aim of science is to become philosophy, the aim of philosophy is to become religion, the aim of religion is to seek God, and thus the aim of humanity is to become divine.

In another place he describes a common experience in this picturesque fashion:

> Every time that we enjoy deep sleep we touch the sphere of our eternal glory. The rhythm of nature throws us on the timeless shores of immortality. The soul plays with herself, free and joyous, on the fields of her own glory, and there the music of the spheres is hushed into the beauty of silence. Leaving her harp, the muse enters into the lotus-chamber of the heart of contemplation.

MANY BOOKS FOR YOUNGER READERS

AMONG the books for the very little people there is something quite new this year. It is "The Babyhood of Wild Beasts," by Georgia M. McNally, (George H. Doran Company.) Miss McNally was born and lived for a part of her early life on the frontier where she came to know something of the wild animals, to care for them and to feel that she understood them. The wild babies of whom she tells were some of them her own personal home friends, like Pompey, the baby lion, and others she became acquainted with in the big Bronx Zoological and other gardens. All the wild babies she has known in one way or another, and the many interesting pictures are of the animals themselves. One of the most amusing shows a baby tiger and a black bear cub. The little tiger, trying to be friendly, is touching noses with the furry little bear, whose hair is fairly standing on end with fear.

"Marjorie's Little Doll School," by Patten Beard, is another big, fat book from Doran's, 208 pages, with many photographs of the dolls. It is a jolly, continuous story, running through the book. The dolls have all the experiences that little real people might have and the pictures show them in the process. The doll people are very up to date, and in their study at school Tootsie and Pinkie have hung a "Votes for Women" banner.

"Billy Bunny and His Friends," by David Cory, (also Doran, $1.50,) is a delightful book of 100 pages, the story which is in fifty chapters, intersected here and there with rhymes and very excellent pictures in black and white by Clara L. Van Vredenburgh. Billy and his friends have wonderful adventures, witness the trip on the "whaleship," which is the "real thing." It is an honest to goodness whale on whose back Billy rides while the whale, patriotically—and nobody knows how—carries a big American flag on his nose, which is the bow of the boat. Here is the rhyme for this part of the story:

> Three cheers for the Red, White, and Blue!
> Billy Bunny on his Whaleship so true,
> We will sail o'er the sea
> He's the Captain for me,
> And you'll laugh at the things we will do!

"The Funnyfeathers," story and excellent pictures by Laosing Campbell, (Dutton, $1.50,) are the feathered creatures of the barnyard or its vicinity, the ducks and the chickens, the pigeons and the crows, and they are as funny as the pictures in black and white and in colors which are scattered through the book show them to be. Panty Banty, Dinky Ducks, and Crooky Crow are some of the characters in the continuous story.

Many pictures in black and white, and some in colors, illustrate the short rhymes of Caroline Hofman in "All Around the Sun Dial," (Dutton, $2.) This is what one little girl swinging on a gate says to another who is just outside in the

TWO JANES:

> A little girl went down our lane,
> And I asked her her name,
> And she said it was Jane,
> And I said, "Why, that's funny.
> Mine's the same."

There are many very good pictures, stories, and poems in "This Year's Book for the Children," (New York: Hodder & Stoughton,) which is bound in paper-covered boards, with a gay picture on the outside. The stories are readable, and the many pictures in color and in black and white excellent. Katharine Pyle's name gives assurance of the good story and pictures, too, which are to be found in "Two Little Mice and Others," which she has written and illustrated. (Dodd, Mead & Co., $1.25.) It is a continuous tale, 108 pages, with many full-page pictures, and it tells of the doings of Teensy and Weensy and their friends, and ends with two new little baby sisters and two new little baby brothers in the mouse home, "the cunningest little pink crawley mice that Teensy and Weensy had ever seen."

"Indian Legends in Rhyme" are told by Grace Purdy Moon. The many illustrations in black and white, and in color, by Karl Moon, are done from life, (Stokes, $1.50.) The legends were gathered at first hand from the Indians of the Southwest, and they have the stirring note, as well as the mysticism and poetic note, of the red men. "How the Bob-Cat Lost His Tail," "Old Brother Fox Goes a Hunting," and "The Drum" are among the legends.

"The Happifats and the Grouch," with many pictures in the text in black and white, and full page in colors, is by Kate Jordan, (E. P. Dutton, $2.) There is a picture of "the original Happifat," a dear little girl, at the opening of the story. This tells of a sad Springtime when the "Grouch" got about. Every one looked cross, even pretty teacher in school had a little frown between her eyes, and things were going sadly wrong until the Happifats from Happy Park got word of it. Then there was a hunt. The Happifats marshaled all their forces, with Tippykins the dog, and the hunt for the Grouch was on. It was a strange thing that, with all their efforts, he did not entirely disappear until the Happifats' baby began to work. Then the old Grouch began to look happily at Baby Happifat, and, finally, he was not to be found, and in his place was left only a prickly thistle.

A very lively, exciting book that any one might like to read is "The Pixie Out-Doors," by Laura Rountree Smith, with gay, fascinating pictures by Clara Powers Wilson. (A. C. McClurg & Co., $1.25.) Pixies are wonderful beings and very useful as mothers' helpers. They carry off the belongings of little boys and girls who do not put them in their place, and Jack and Jill, in the book, have a wonderful experience, for a Pixie had them blown right up the chimney, and they went to a mysterious Pixie house built entirely of the things the children had left around.

"Happy All Day Through" is a large flat book in a box, by John G. Bowman, illustrations by Janet Laura Scott (P. F. Volland Company.) They are very gay and brilliant pictures, one to each page and a little explanatory rhyme beneath. There are two sets of small books with excellent colored pictures. There are three books in the first, "Picture and Story Series," "Fairies and Goblins for Storyland," "Tell Me a Story Picture Book," and "Boys and Girls from Storyland," little stories taken from long ones, all simplified by Leila Cheney, with drawings in color by Maria L. Kirk, (Lippincott, 50 cents each.) Two little mouse books are "The Adventures of the Greyfur Family" and "The Greyfur's Neighbors," told by Vera Nyce, the very charming gay-colored pictures by Helene Nyce, (Lippincott, 50 cents each.)

BURROWS OF MICHIGAN

BURROWS OF MICHIGAN AND THE REPUBLICAN PARTY: A Biography and a History. By William Dana Orcutt. Two Volumes. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. $6.

FARMER WILLIAM BURROWS, a native of Connecticut, with features showing unmistakable traces of Scotch ancestry, sought a home in Chautauqua County, this State, but soon removed to the nearby Pennsylvania County of Erie, where, in a log cabin, were born to him seven sons and a daughter, Hannibal Hamilton, Jerome Bonaparte, Christopher Columbus, Sylvester Solomon, Adrian Addison, William Riley, Julius Caesar, and Almeda, thus named, not by their progenitor, who had no faith in the higher education, but by his more lettered helpmeet—a reminder of the adage, with all due respect to the memory of a true mother in Israel, that a little learning is a dangerous thing. Three of these youths rose to prominence, and so in a way justified their names and the giver of them. The present volumes deal with the youngest, who developed into an orator and a leader of the highest rank in the councils of the great party that saved the Union and freed the slave.

The public career of Senator Burrows opened in 1872, when at the age of 33 and a resident of Kalamazoo, Mich., he was elected a Representative in Congress. Meanwhile he had studied law and greatly improved his oratorical gifts, eliminating wholly the "spread-eagleism" of his early appearances on the stump. He had now reached the height of his youthful ambition. At the age of 10, after listening to a speech by Daniel Webster, he was found on a stump back of the barn delivering an oration, and he met the jeers of his older brothers by exclaiming between his sobs of mortification: "I don't care. Some day you will hear my voice in the halls of Congress." He never afterward sought to reach a loftier eminence, although his name was more than once mentioned in connection with the Vice Presidency, and even with the highest position in the gift of the people.

In Congress the new Representative was drawn into close political relations and intimate friendship with Blaine and McKinley, the latter intrusting him with the preparation of the Tariff bill which became famous as a protective measure. This was to him a labor of love, for he was from first to last a thorough believer in the necessity of adequate import duties to encourage and sustain American industries. On this ground he opposed even reciprocity except so far as it gave the President power to use the free list as a lever to obtain tariff reductions from foreign countries.

Although frankly a partisan, Senator Burrows was still more a patriot and ready to sink partisanship when the honor of the nation was involved. In the Venezuela boundary controversy with Great Britain he heartily supported President Cleveland's firm stand on this question, declaring that the Monroe Doctrine ought to be enforced at all hazards, even if resort must be had to the extremity of war. "Yet war could be averted," he said, "by having it understood that it would be inevitable with any nation refusing to respect the declared policy of the United States in this regard." As the author pertinently remarks: "Recent pacifists who felt that to take a firm position was more likely to produce war than a continued policy of vacillation should study the Venezuelan episode with discriminating care." We may add that whenever an American rises to his feet in response to the notes of "The Star-Spangled Banner" he should remember that it was Senator Burrows who first suggested that patriotic act in a West Point graduating address.

In freely using the public utterances of Senator Burrows in connection with an account of his legislative acts during his forty years' service in the House and Senate, Mr. Orcutt has wisely followed the best writers in another branch of literature, whose characters are left, as far as possible, to reveal themselves in dialogue. To these utterances in and out of the National Capitol we must refer the reader who seeks to obtain an adequate idea of the Senator from Michigan as a constructive statesmen and an orator of rare gifts.

The New York Times Says:

"A brilliant, colorful, enthralling story of adventure, this volume is beyond doubt the most entertaining work on South America that has appeared in the English language—or any other, for that matter."

VAGABONDING DOWN THE ANDES
By HARRY A. FRANCK
Author of "A Vagabond Journey Around the World," etc.

And Here Is More Unbiased Testimony

The Chicago News:
"If Mr. Newman, who travel lectures so interestingly, had Fanny Brice on one side of him and Raymond Hitchcock on the other, with a Follies ensemble chanting a Wodehouse lyric in the background, the performance would begin to approximate the joy of 'Vagabonding Down the Andes.'"

The Bookman:
"Not only a rare record of endurance and adventure in out-of-the-way places, but in addition a valuable contribution to our knowledge of the Andes and the Andeans."

The New York Tribune:
"Mr. Franck is a painstaking and indefatigable explorer with the style of a novelist, whose chief interest does not lie in history or geography, in archaeology or biology, but in humanity. . . . His book, in fine, is valuable as an intensive study of half a little known continent as it is fascinating as a story of adventure and discovery."

New Orleans Times-Picayune:
"The book is really a reflection of the mental attitude of the people of the Andes—a book of adventure, color, and incident, an important and valuable study of that half of the American continent which lies to the south of us."

Louisville Courier-Journal:
"If ever there was a man deserving of the title of 'Prince of Vagabonds,' Harry Franck is surely that man. It behooves us to know the truth about the other half of our continent, and Harry Franck has a genius for truth-telling."

Detroit Free Press:
"Altogether Mr. Franck has done the United States a service in indicating the conditions which must be overcome before we can 'do business' with a very large section of the lower half of the western hemisphere."

Louisville Evening Post:
"There are stupid books of travel—we have seen them—but none has ever borne the name of Franck."

Washington Star:
"It is an amazingly rich report, rich in substance and riotously rich in color."

HEARTS UNDAUNTED

HEARTS UNDAUNTED. By Eleanor Atkinson. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.30.

ONE of the most exciting periods in American history was that around the very beginning of the nineteenth century, when the pioneers were pushing westward, when small settlements were the seeds of crowded cities, when the various population was composed of English and Scotch and French and Indian, and attacks and reprisals were the commonplaces of life. It is at this time and in this setting that Miss Atkinson has placed her latest romance. It is an adventure story from first to last.

The heroine, Eleanor Lytle, otherwise known as "Little-Ship-Under-Full-Sail," is brought up in the midst of romantic struggles and passes her early youth as the adopted (or stolen) sister of Chief Cornplanter. But this strange fact of her history, tragic as it was for her mother, saved her and her own family many hardships in later days. She learned woodcraft and Indian lore of sorts and became, moreover, a figure of mystery and dignity to Cornplanter's tribe and their friends. But it was after his death and her restoration to the little American colony that Nelly Lytle's most feverish excitements began. For then she became a frontiersman's wife and passed through unimaginable perils and struggles in the rough Indian-ridden country in the neighborhood of what is now cosmopolitan Chicago. The hardships of life on the frontier, not merely for a woman with the home-making habit and for her babies, but for men used to difficulties, are presented so as to seem rather fascinating obstacles.

But the wildest moments are those when the heroic couple around whom the tale centres find themselves in the thick of the War of 1812, and beset by savages, hungry for firewater, powder, and loot. These chapters are rich in thrilling incidents; hairbreadth escapes, unsuspected dangers, wonderful plots, and displays of magnificent courage are so thickly piled up as to carry the reader, especially the romantic reader, eagerly forward.

For despite its interest, and the fact that it is based on historic truth, the book does lack the element of realism. It is glossed over with sentimentality; heroism and nobility are unrelieved by any mere human failing; and through all the trials and battles which the protagonists endure they seem to preserve a serene confidence and a recurrently retrieved happiness which is quite remarkable and equally unconvincing. It is, however, much more entertaining than the average romance, and the stressed historic note gives it an added interest.

SKINNER'S BABY

SKINNER'S BABY. By Henry Irving Dodge. Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.35 net.

That same Skinner whose purchase of a dress suit and the momentous consequences resulting therefrom formed the basis of one tale related by Mr. Dodge, reappears here as a proud father. But if a proud father, he was also a fairly sensible one, while his wife, Honey, was an unusually sensible mother. It is not surprising that under their tutelage, assisted as they were by Soberaides, most admirable of Scotch terriers, young William Rutherford Manning Skinner developed into a "regular boy," neither a bully nor a "sissy." Contrasted with him are Jimmie McLaughlin, son of the McLaughlin who was one of Skinner's partners, and Sonny Jackson, only child of the enormously rich Willard Jackson, whose mother insisted on costuming him in Little Lord Fauntleroy style. These three small boys, assisted by one small girl, unconsciously determine the course of an important business transaction, involving the success or ruin of the firm with which Skinner is connected, and do it thoroughly.

The little tale is amusing, and the account of Skinner's dreams before the baby came at once funny and pathetic. Baby Skinner himself is no supernaturally virtuous cherub, but a sturdy youngster, energetic, inquisitive, and possessed of that appalling logic which some children wield, to the utter dismay of those who endeavor to cope with them.

THE BLUE AURA

THE BLUE AURA. By Elizabeth York Miller. New York: Edward J. Clode. $1.35.

It is seldom that the lonely clown figures convincingly in a drama or a tale, but he is nearly always an appealing creature in spite of that. It is so that Turco, the monkey-eyed, golden-hearted man, appears in this swiftly moving romance. Of all the engaging people who lend interest or charm to the story he is the finest, and his tragic end poetically contributes to the picture of him as a figure of sacrifice.

The main characters are Dora, the impulsive, attractive, selfish little ballet dancer; simple Ted, her husband, and Turco, the latter's vaudeville partner and the friend of them both. Around these three, in their intimate relation, the jealousies which threaten it, and the clown's sympathetic struggles to maintain it is attention centred. The other people who come into the story are interesting only as affecting these, from the poor cripple whom Turco secretly cherishes, to Dora's unacknowledged father and his friend, Lord Anthony, who for all the usualness of his villany is skillfully saved from seeming melodramatic.

By what means the author contrives to write so commonplace a tale without lapsing into cheapness it is difficult to say. Certainly even the most important characters are rather stereotyped in their actions and reactions, and it is not the conclusion alone which savors of sentimentality. Yet Miss Miller does psychologize Dora correctly; and she manages to convey her environment, both as a starved, proud little dancer and as a complacent, imperious wife, with some success. The story is carried along by a brisk style so easily that the reader scarcely appreciates the omissions. But, if it has the fault of a too simple facility, it has as well the merit of promising better things.

KIDDIES

KIDDIES. By J. J. Bell. Frederick A. Stokes Company. $1.50 net.

Mr. Bell's favorite MacGregor appears in several of these short stories and sketches, objecting to his lessons, delighting his parents, playing pranks with Willie Thomson, and annoying his Aunt Purdie, very much in his customary and not unamusing manner. He is the only child who has part in more than one of the tales, some of them rather pathetic, others quite funny, which make up this new book. Many grown-ups, who have struggled with other people's children, will appreciate the sketch entitled "Some Advantages of Being an Aunt," and women who have not forgotten their teens will sympathize with the heroine of "Silk Stockings and Suedes." The humorous tales are, generally speaking, the best, the serious and pathetic ones being somewhat conventional and oversentimental.

"Little Boy" is a rather commonplace tale of a lonely boy and a wealthy couple who had lost their only child. "The Good Fairy" tells of another boy, this time one who made his teacher presents despite all difficulties. "The Answer" relates the averted tragedy of a turkeyless Christmas, and "Jock" describes a severe woman who nearly won the hatred of the boy for whom she was trying to do her austere best. The other tales are all very much on the order of those described, with the exception of "The Little Tyrant," the familiar story of the tribulations of a man who during his wife's absence is obliged to look after their baby and is reduced to a state of complete exhaustion.

CHARRED WOOD

CHARRED WOOD. By "Myles Murrdach." Chicago: The Reilly & Britton Company. $1.25.

The mystery of this detective story centres around the old problem of mixed identity. But it is complicated further by the fact that one of the two confusing girls is a runaway Grand Duchess, whose adventure has international consequences. Moreover, almost all the important figures in the story, from Father Murray, the disgraced priest, to Mark Griffen, the aspiring lover of one of the twin-faced girls, are curiously related to each other by blood or the bond of shared experience. The protagonists themselves do not appreciate how fully their lives have overlapped until the very end of the book, when each achieves peace after his own fashion. And the unraveling of the tangled threads of these twisted lives affords a secondary interest to that of who the Grand Duchess really is, and how such a queer resemblance could occur between her and a strange English girl.

Linked up with the more exciting narrative is Father Murray's priestly history, and occasional passages of exceptionally serious intention in which he discusses or expounds the faith and the Church. Although his arguments never have the sharpness and strength which is traditional with Jesuitical defenders of Catholicism, they have the double interest of contrast with the mystery theme, and of the expression of a cherished philosophy. It is altogether a simple tale, but somewhat above the average story of its type.

THE ENCHANTED SEA GULL

THE ENCHANTED SEA GULL. By Harriet Barnett and Roxroy Keene. Boston: The Roxburgh Publishing Company.

A love story, highly romantic and compact of whimsical fantasy, "The Enchanted Sea Gull" wings on its enraptured way without the slightest care for material means. It begins with the falling of a sea gull upon the deck of a yacht cruising in southern waters. A member of the party writes a fanciful ode bidding the bird to "fare forth elate" and while seeking its "natural salt-savored spray" to seek also "the solitary heart disconsolate of her, my spirit mate," and, fastening the ode to the gull's wing, sends forth the feathered messenger. A girl on a lighthouse reef off the New England Coast is the one into whose hands the missive falls, and she writes to the poet a letter of sprightly fancy, unrevealing as to her own personality, but poetic in its feeling and of refined and lively spirit. The ensuing correspondence fills three hundred and more pages, in which, although they do not meet, love develops, they become engaged, he goes abroad, and writes to her from various places in Europe. In the course of their correspondence they deal much in persiflage, attempt to describe their natures to each other, tell illuminating stories about themselves, their desires, their occupations; write much in a vein of mingled sprightliness and fancy, indulge in poetry now and then, and always bedeck their thoughts with much literary reference. The entire story is told in these letters, and finally the romance, just when it seems about to crown the happiness of the two lovers with sight of each other, comes to a tragic end.

HOW COULD YOU JEAN?

HOW COULD YOU JEAN? By Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd. New York: Doubleday, Page & Co. $1.35.

Few girls, finding themselves astonishingly penniless and naturally helpless, would choose Jean's way out. But she has the virtue of originality, together with all the others peculiar to the heroines of contemporary fiction, such as charm and beauty and remarkable ability. So she decides to hire out as a cook-lady. She is even more particular about choosing her employers than most of her colleagues; finally accepting a position with a pair of scientists, man and wife, who are as unconventional as they are absent-minded. They do, however, obey the conventions of fiction, like the other characters in the story. Jean is as fortunate in the working out of her destiny as in her choice of employers. The hired man, who is not a hired man really, and the cook, who may be otherwise described as a denuded heiress, bring her adventure to the happiest termination. The author, though she has written several successful novels, has not yet discovered the trick of suggesting prosiness and similar dull traits without wearying the reader by giving examples of them. In fact, the tale moves so slowly that it seems rather the material for a short story than for a book of 327 pages. It shows, however, Mrs. Brainerd's known knack for light fiction.

NO. 13 RUE DU BON DIABLE

NO 13 RUE DU BON DIABLE. By Arthur Sherburne Hardy. Illustrated. Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.35 net.

Mr. Hardy's new book differs from the general run of detective stories in that he makes no attempt to mystify or to mislead the reader, but takes him into his confidence at once. From the first we know that the excellent M. Janvier had bought the string of pearls as a birthday gift for his adored niece Corinne; we know how the notes with which he intended to pay for them came from the bank, and the way in which the combination led to his being murdered. We know, too, who the murderer was, and what he did, and the precautions he took in his endeavor to escape being found out. It is upon the efforts of the detectives to discover the criminal, their mistakes and blunders and incorrect deductions, with the results achieved when at last M. Joly, the retired police officer, took a hand in the affair, that the author depends to hold the reader's interest.

The idea is a good one and has some novelty, but one feels that it could have been developed more cleverly and greater ingenuity been shown in the complications. It is a fairly entertaining tale, however, and sufficiently interesting to while away an idle hour or two. Moreover, it is written in a better style, and its characters are less wooden, than is usually the case in stories of this type.

MY DOCTOR DOG

MY DOCTOR DOG. By Edward A. Steiner. New York: Fleming H. Revell Company. 50 cents.

Professor Steiner is known best for his contributions to the literature of the immigrant; and while his latest little fiction is ostensibly a dog story, it does not fail to emphasize the author's predilections for portraits of peasant life. It is, in fact, a story within a story. The author gives his narrative about the pet which was thought by the peasants of his South European birthplace to effect magical cures for their diseased infants, and then uses it to point a moral and adorn a second tale. The dog figures in the little book to far greater advantage than does the young college girl who so belatedly uses the inspiration of the canine's story. And when the author forgets himself and his intrusive audience (the dog tale is told in the first person) he gives a picture of the dirty, beautiful, simple village and its peasant population which is as engaging as it is convincing. But the frame of this picture is as distracting as it is foolishly ornate. After all, the story is the thing and not the story-teller's sentimental associations or his ethical convictions.

various classes of food demanded by the human body, tell in what kinds of products these food values are found, the various ways in which a balanced ration can be devised, the part played in nutrition by such great food staples as bread, sugar, milk, potatoes, the advantages of, at the present time, mixed flour for bread. One chapter takes up the question of grain and alcohol, about which the country is likely to hear much more before the war is over, and discusses it solely from the point of view of whether or not there is a waste of nutritional substance involved in the manufacture of alcoholic beverages. Their conclusion is that very little grain usable for human food would be saved by stopping the manufacture of alcohol.

A much more comprehensive discussion of the question of making and drinking alcoholic beverages in wartime is made by Marr Murray in his book, "Drink and the War." It is an English book and studies the matter from the point of view afforded by a country which has been discussing and experimenting with it through several years of war. The author describes himself as being interested in the propaganda or forces of neither side of the question, and as being just "an ordinary person fond of an occasional glass of beer." His survey of the problem of drink in a nation at war is thoroughly practical and is pretty exhaustive. It includes what has been done in France and in Russia, and the results, the connection between drink and "frightfulness," the influence of drink as shown by observation and by scientific records upon women, soldiers, workers, the food supply, the next generation, and describes the action which has been taken by the British Government—which he thinks might more truly be called "inaction." His conclusion is strongly in favor of rigid curtailment of the liquor trade and drastic action by the Government.

CHESTERTON'S "ENGLAND"

A SHORT HISTORY OF ENGLAND. By Gilbert K. Chesterton. New York: John Lane Company. $1.50.

MR. CHESTERTON'S thesis, astonishing yet characteristic withal, is that the Middle Ages were the time of true democracy, and that parliamentary government is government by an anti-popular oligarchy. Upon this general theme he has written a strange and fascinating history of England which leads up to a denunciation of the adoption of German thought and fashion in recent years, and an expression of deep thankfulness that England has at last broken away from this pernicious influence and is returning to her ancient democracy. A novel and interesting book and written with that mastery of poetic paradox which is Chesterton's own.

For in the midst of crisp accusations, brilliant balanced sentences, paradoxical simplicities, Chesterton every now and then gives us a paragraph, or a page, or a chapter, that is sheer poetry. That is Chesterton. We have been reading, for instance, a long, clever, brisk chapter on the mediaeval guilds and the relation of property and democracy. And upon this there follow some pages in praise of Joan of Arc—in a new chapter so simply and poetically and beautifully written that we find its rhythmic prose sentences staying with us for the sheer beauty of their sound as well as for the intensity of their feeling. That, indeed, to repeat, is Chesterton. It is not for nothing that this history of England has been written by the man who wrote the Ballade of the White Horse.

Beginning with a sketch of the organization of the Roman Empire which made the time of Britain's existence as a colony a good time to be looked back upon through the Dark Ages, Chesterton goes on to tell us fascinatingly of the age of legends, of romanticism, then of the Norman Conquest. The Norman, he says, was not a wall; he was a gate—the gate through which civilization entered England. During the years that followed, two things were being built up in England—mediaeval despotism and mediaeval democracy; and these two were allies. Chesterton suggests it as wholly probable that the divorce of these two and the beginning of anti-popular Parliamentary power can be traced to the moment when young Richard II., after promising his rebellious people to be himself their "leader," betrayed them to Parliament and allowed Parliament actually to rule. Generally speaking, the democracy of the Middle Ages, of which Mr. Chesterton writes so alluringly, may be summed up by saying that power over international relations lay wholly in the hands of the King, and that the people, largely through their guilds, were at home free and self-governing.

Upon the Reformation and the age of the Puritans, Mr. Chesterton is very hard. Ambitious parvenus in England, he says, made use of the change in religion to build up tremendous power for themselves. Parliamentary government of England has been, he says, government by the rich. He points out that the eighteenth and early nineteenth century leaders, whatever virtues they may have had, were absolutely set against democracy. He writes:

> If it be really questioned whether I am right in calling their whole world an aristocracy, and the very reverse of a democracy, the true historical test is this: That when republicanism really entered the world, they instantly waged two great wars against it—or, (if the view be preferred,) it instantly waged two great wars against them. America and France revealed the real nature of the English Parliament.

In the years since the accession of the German Royal family in England, (unimportant as that may be said to be in itself,) Chesterton asserts that his country has drifted more and more toward German ideals—German principles of education, German social reforms, (and how G. K. C. hates those!) the German theory of the "Teutonic Race." Now all that is changed. And England is once more democratic, a democracy fighting for democracy's cause. But, he adds, she will have to stick to it, or a German-like "State Socialism," a "Servile State" will result.

Mr. Chesterton criticises some things in his country, writes with glowing pride of others, is very much an Englishman. His book will arrest attention, cause discussion, interest its readers through what he says, and delight them by the way he says it.

LI HUNG CHANG

LI HUNG CHANG. By J. O. P. Bland. Makers of the Nineteenth Century Series. New York: Henry Holt & Co. $2.

THE notion, long cherished by florid journalists and cannily fostered by Li Hung Chang himself, of the great Viceroy as a Machiavellian superman is destroyed for all time in this excellent biography by J. O. P. Bland in "The Makers of the Nineteenth Century" series. Li emerges in this book as by far the greatest man nineteenth-century China produced, a singularly astute and able diplomat, but still a typical mandarin, heir to all the corruptions and superstitions of the social and political system in which he was born. We follow his career in this book from the time when in 1854, with the help of the gallant "Chinese" Gordon and his "ever-victorious" army, he put down the Taiping rebellion, earning thereby a quite undeserved reputation for military efficiency, which formed the basis of his extraordinary prestige in his own country. Li's unwillingness to pay his army according to promise, his preference that it should take its own reward by looting, and his duplicity in the matter of the execution of the rebel leaders, violating an express promise to Gordon that their lives should be spared, show how completely his morals were unaffected by the Occidental standards of Gordon. Gordon severed relations with Chang in high dudgeon after this incident, but Li was a big enough man, and surprisingly so in contrast with his background of Oriental contempt for the "wild barbarians," to appreciate Gordon's bravery and disinterestedness. In a famous memorial to the Empress in 1867 Li showed his appreciation of Gordon's qualities by a fine tribute to his character.

This contact with Gordon early in his career is supposed by Mr. Bland to have had a permanent influence on Li's relations with Europeans. In fact it is because Li, alone among his immensely arrogant and immensely ignorant countrymen had a keen appreciation of the mechanical and scientific proficiency of the "wild barbarians," because he possessed sufficient breadth of mind to understand that a system of morality which managed somehow to produce men like "Chinese" Gordon, whose word could be relied upon, must after all be worth something, because, in short, he tried all his life long to effect a compromise between the Chinese as "belonging to the world of moral force" and the civilizations of the western world built on physical force, that Li's claim as one of the makers of the nineteenth century securely rests.

In his famous Memorial of 1867, Li addressed his sovereign in part as follows:

> It is often said that foreigners are crafty and malign and full of unexpected ruses, but is it not the fact that Chinese are the same? Or, rather, that the outrageous craft and malignity of the Chinese exceeds even that of foreigners? The truth is that at present foreigners are powerful and the Chinese feeble. And whence arises the power of the former? It certainly is not innate in them, but depends upon the fact that the "requisites of Government are sufficiency of food, sufficiency of military equipment," and the confidence of the people in their ruler. * * * The humble opinion of the writer is that in conducting business with foreigners the point of the greatest importance is to avoid exciting their contempt. * * * But if they feel respect for China all matters can be mutually arranged, and even difficult questions can be settled by compromise or agreement.

Li's statesmanship never found a more masterly expression than in this document; to its policy of "watchful waiting" he adhered throughout his twenty-five years of service in the most important satrapy of the empire, as Viceroy of Chihli. Commenting on this policy Mr. Bland says:

> That his proclivities were essentially pacific there is no manner of doubt; but his traducers ignored the fact that they were based on his definite and perfectly correct appreciation of China's incapacity to resist attack. He was never too proud, but only too wise, to fight; at the same time he alone made some show of systematic effort to remove from his country, as Japan had done, the reproach of her weakness. * * * By sternly checking all attacks upon foreigners within the limits of his jurisdiction he had done more than any of his viceregal contemporaries to limit the European powers' pretexts and opportunities of aggression.

At the same time, with all his acute awareness of China's helplessness, Li Hung Chang did almost nothing to undermine the system which was the cause of that helplessness—for Li was a mandarin of mandarins. His vast fortune was unquestionably built up by manipulation of Government money; he unhesitatingly put incompetent and corrupt relatives in important military positions. "It is strictly correct to say," says Mr. Bland of this phase of Li's activity, "that the battle of the Yalu was lost by reason of the peculations of Li's son-in-law. * * * Li himself must be held to blame." While uttering pious platitudes for European consumption concerning the opium trade, Li himself, as the greatest poppy-grower in China, was drawing immense revenues from it. In many respects Li Hung Chang was a product of the system that surrounded him, but it is as a transitional figure, pointing from that system to a new order, that his significance lies. And it is his greatest tribute that "the men who figure today as the highest expression, consciously or unconsciously, of the nation's intellectual and administrative activities owe much of their material and moral equipment to the mind which first perceived and to the courage which first proclaimed the necessity of new measures to meet the impact of the West."

WOOD AND WATER FRIENDS

WOOD AND WATER FRIENDS. By Clarence Hawkes. Illustrated by Chester Copeland. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell Company. $1.25.

An engaging collection of nature stories is this, written especially for young people, but interesting reading for folk of a larger growth as well. The author, Clarence Hawkes, grew up in the country with a passionate love of all outdoor things and for the birds and beasts most of all. When he was still a young man a gunshot wound made him totally blind. But his mind had stored up its treasures from the wood and water friendships of his boyhood, and he wrote many tales from his memories. The best of these he has collected in this book. There are thirty-three stories in all.

Some of the tales are after the manner of "The Jungle Books"; that is, the birds and animals are themselves the chief "characters," talking among themselves, or actually to "humans," living through great adventures. More often the author relates the incidents and sketches the friends of stream and tree and woodland from the merely human point of view. Some of the most entertaining relate the strange conversations that boys happened to have with animals. "The People of Frog Hollow," for example, is about the little boy who watched the frogs in the pond, who heard them talk, and who was strangely turned into a frog boy and taken to visit the denizens of Frog Hollow; at least, he thought he was! In "The Tale of a Turtle" a turtle converses pleasantly with a boy beside a stream. "A Tender Mother" is a pretty story about a fox family. "Old Ringtail's Waterloo" tells the story of a captive coon. In "A Night with Ruff Grouse" there are no "human characters" at all.

The stories are varied and will interest children and young people of different ages—some of them speak especially to younger folk, while others have a wider field of interest. There is much to commend in the book as an introduction to nature lore.

EDMUND H. EITEL is preparing for publication in the near future what he hopes will be a complete collection of the letters of James Whitcomb Riley, and he will be grateful if any one who has letters from Riley or knows of their existence will communicate with him or will send the letters, which will be returned as soon as copied. He can be addressed in care of the Riley Estate, Indianapolis, Ind.

Gertrude Atherton has written a new novel, to be called "The White Morning," which will be published, probably in February, by the Stokes Company. Mrs. Atherton is now devoting much attention to American war relief work and is active on the Organization Committee of "Hero Land."

The George H. Doran Company announces the early publication of Dr. Harry Stürmer's "Two War Years in Constantinople," which has attracted much attention in Europe. Dr. Stürmer was the correspondent in Constantinople of the Cologne Zeitung, and what he saw and learned while there made him as ardent an anti-German, notwithstanding his birth and ancestry, as any belligerent now fighting the Teutons. The volume lays bare what he learned of German and Turkish ethics, politics, and war methods.

Joseph Conrad is writing a series of prefaces for several of his novels, of which Doubleday, Page & Co. will bring out new editions in the near future. The first to appear will be "Lord Jim," and in the course of the preface Mr. Conrad says:

> I have been asked at times whether this was not the book of mine I liked the best. I am a great foe to favoritism in public life, in private life, and even in the delicate relationship of an author to his works. As a matter of principle I will have no favorites. But I don't go so far as to feel grieved and annoyed by the preference some people give to my "Lord Jim."

The rising tide of interest in Lincoln's character and career, especially marked since the United States entered the war, is instanced again by the issue of the second edition of Judge A. J. Dittenhoefer's little book of personal reminiscence, "How We Elected Lincoln," which was published a few months ago by the Harpers. The author knew Lincoln well, worked for his election and re-election to the Presidency, and is the sole survivor of the list of Republican electors from New York, that was headed by Horace Greeley, in 1864. Upon the publication of his book, Robert T. Lincoln wrote to him of the vividness with which his reminiscences recalled his own recollection of those stirring days. Thomas A. Edison wrote him in the same vein, saying that as a youth he had seen both Lincoln and Douglas, and added: "I remember you fifty years ago in some case that I recorded when I was a telegraph operator."

The Oxford University Press, American Branch, has ready for early issue a volume by Dr. James Brown Scott of Washington, D. C., giving "A Survey of International Relations Between the United States and Germany, 1914-1917." It will contain a complete account, based on official documents, of the controversy with Germany. Dr. Scott has edited two other volumes, one containing the diplomatic correspondence between the United States and Germany during those three years and the other a collection of President Wilson's messages, addresses, and papers, which will follow at an early date.

"The Letters of John Holmes to James Russell Lowell and Others," selected by Miss Alice Longfellow and Miss Mary Ware, with connecting links of narrative by William Roscoe Thayer, is ready for immediate issue by the Houghton Mifflin Company.

Arthur Gleason, whose correspondence from the battle zone since the beginning of the war and whose several books about it have been widely read, is now in charge of the Publicity Department of the Y. M. C. A. with the American Expeditionary Force in France.

Bernard J. Tiemann of New York City has been for the last fifteen years, while traveling throughout the country, collecting flag data as a labor of love, and he purposes compiling a comprehensive, up-to-date history of our flags. He will be grateful if any one possessing such knowledge, local preferred, will communicate with him at 375 West Forty-sixth Street, New York City.

Major Ian Hay Beith dedicates his new book, "All In It," "To All Second Lieutenants, and, in Particular, to the Memory of One Second Lieutenant." The officer "In Particular" was Major Beith's young brother-in-law, who was killed at the front.

Francis R. Bellamy, author of "The Balance," has been working on a new novel, but has recently gone to Washington, where he will remain for the duration of the war as Washington representative of the Red Cross Magazine.

Doubleday, Page & Co. announce that an exhibition will be held some time this Fall of the work of the French binders at Country Life Press.

The author of "J'Accuse," which attracted the widest attention two years ago in France, England, and America, has written another work called "The Crime," which the George H. Doran Company announces ready for immediate issue. It sets forth the proof of Germany's responsibility for the war.

The publishers of "Who's Who in America," A. N. Marquis & Co., announce the approach of the twentieth anniversary of that always interesting volume—its tenth biennial issue. The initial volume in 1899 contained 827 pages and 8,600 biographies. The last issue contained over 3,000 pages, and the forthcoming edition will have more than 22,000 biographies.

Major Eric Fisher Wood, whose "The Notebook of an Intelligence Officer" is a Fall publication, is now stationed at Chillicothe, Ohio, as Assistant Chief of Staff to Major Gen. Glenn.

Dr. Frank E. Luts, whose "Field Book of Insects" is a November publication of the Putnams, was for five years a member of the staff of the Carnegie Institution's Station for Experimental Evolution, where his work was the breeding of insects for the purpose of investigating the laws of evolution and heredity. He has now been for some time with the Museum of Natural History, New York City, where he has charge of the collections of insects and spiders.

Norman Jacobson, co-author with Nina Wilcox Putnam of "When the Highbrow Joined the Outfit," has recently returned from a visit to Wyoming and has brought back a collection of new drawings and paintings of which he will make an exhibition at the Greenwich Village Inn, Sheridan Square, during the week beginning Nov. 26.

"Our Hawaii," by Charmian K. London, will be published within a week or two by the Macmillans. The book will be a complete guide to Hawaii, and will also narrate many reminiscences of Mr. and Mrs. London's life and travels in those islands.

What is perhaps the first collection of American fairy tales will be published by E. P. Dutton & Co. at once under the title "The Boy Who Went East and Other Indian Fairy Tales." It contains a dozen folktales and myths from the Algonquin and Iroquois tribes retold and adapted to children's reading by Ethel C. Brill.

Isaac Don Levina, author of "The Russian Revolution," who was in Petrograd at the time of the revolution last March, says of Lenine, the Maximalist who has risen to high command, that he considered "a capitalist worse than a King" and thought "an industrial magnate or a leading banker worse than a Czar or a Kaiser." He preached to the working people that it made no difference to them whether their rulers were German, French, or British, and that they might as well live under the rule of the Hohenzollerns as be governed by a capitalistic organization.

Major Granville Fortescue's "Frances Bears the Burden" is ready for publication by the Macmillans. It is a delineation of France's share in the fighting and of the organization and practice of war as developed in France during the last three years. It has a foreword by André Tardieu, High Commissioner of France in the United States.

Ex-Ambassador Gerard's recent book, "My Four Years in Germany," is being translated into the following languages and arrangements for its publication in the respective countries are under way: French, German, Danish, Swedish, Dutch, Italian, and Spanish.

The Mexican Problem

The Author says:

"Independence, individually and nationally, is passing away. The inventions, the mechanism, the arts for man's progress are all here. The way is now open. Human slavery, serfdom, peonage are passing. Democracy is rising. The last great struggle is on and fourteen nations and forty problems are in it. But it is all one,—human freedom that man may know his fellow and that mutual helpfulness may arise, individually, collectively, nationally."

"Independence day must take on a new meaning. National independence is hereafter possible only by interdependence."

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

ANSWERS BY THE EDITOR

E. H. SIMONDS.—Will you kindly tell me something of the author Borrow and, in particular, "The Romany Rye"?

George Borrow was a noted English writer and an expert in languages. He was born at East Dereham, Norfolk, England, in 1803, and as a youth accompanied his father, who was a recruiting officer for the English Army, to various quarters of England. At 17 he was articled to a solicitor at Norwich. However, he spent most of his time in studying languages, at which he was a great adept. From Norwich he went to London, where he wrote for booksellers and also took part in the compiling of the Newgate Calendar. He then became an agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society. In this capacity he traveled through France, Germany, Russia, Spain, and the East. He made two visits to Spain, and on each of the visits he was imprisoned there for circulating the Scriptures. He finally married the widow of a naval officer and settled on an estate in Norfolk, where he died on July 30, 1881. His principal publications are "The Zincali, or an account of the Gypsies in Spain," "The Bible in Spain," "Lavengro," "The Romany Rye," "Wild Wales," "Romano Lavo-Lil," and many translations of works in German, Danish, Spanish, and other languages. He also wrote "Targum, or Metrical Translations from Thirty Languages and Dialects," which was published in St. Petersburg in 1835. His works are easily obtainable in this country.

"Yorktown"

GEORGE M. WEIMAR.—Can you tell me the author of "Yorktown: An Historical Romance," reviewed in 1827?

The author of the book "Yorktown" was Eliza L. Cushing, who on her marriage became Mrs. Foster.

Person's Satirical Poetry

R. K. JOHNSON.—Will you kindly inform me of the possible value of "Satirical Poetry," London, 1827, by the late Professor Person, entitled "Eloisa in Dishabille and Curtain Lectures," containing numerous colored plates; also a complete set of nine volumes, works of Alexander Pope, London, 1766, in leather?

Professor Person's book brings at auction from $5 to $5.25. The 1766 edition of Pope is worth about $6.

Two Poems

GLEN.—Will you please let me know in what poem or book the following lines occur?

> The bridegroom may forget his bride
> Was made his wedded wife yest'reen;
> The monther may forget the child
> That nestwhile gratified at her knee,
> But I'll remember thee, Glencairn,
> For all that thou has done for me.

Also this other:

> And if my standard bearer fall,
> (As fall, full well, he may,)
> For never saw I promise
> Of a harder, bloodier fray;
> Then, follow where my white plume shines
> Amid the ranks of war,
> And be your oriflamme today,
> The Helmet of Navarre.

The lines quoted in the first query are from the poem, "Lament for James, Earl of Glencairn," by Robert Burns. It may be found in any good collection of Burns's poems. It is also printed in the "Lincoln Literary Collection," published by the American Book Company, New York.

The second quotation is from the poem "Ivry," by Thomas B. Macaulay. This poem is a favorite for school recitation and is printed in Stevenson's "Home Book of Verse," in Dana's "Household Book of Poetry," and in many other collections of verse.

Indian Tribes

N. F. R.—Can you tell me if Schoolcraft's "History of the Indian Tribes of the United States," 6 volumes, 1851, Lippincott, Grambo & Co., is of value?

The work inquired about by our correspondent has brought at auction from $30 to $45.

Wilson's "Ornithology"

E. H.—Will you kindly tell me the value of the first five volumes of Alexander Wilson's "Ornithology," illustrated with colored engravings, published by Bradford & Inskeep, Philadelphia, 1808-1812?

Wilson's "American Ornithology," Philadelphia, 1808-14, nine volumes, quarto, brings at auction from $40 to $90. We do not find a sale of the first five volumes by themselves.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

ALICE T. FROST.—I am sending a copy of the poem, "Some Lover's Dear Thought," containing

> Ah! dear little golden fetter,
> You bind me to difficult things,

for which Mrs. T. S. Crippen asked in The Book Review of Sept. 2. The author is Susan Coolidge:

> I ought to be kinder always,
> For the light of his kindly eyes,
> I ought to be wiser always,
> Because he is just and wise;
> And gentler in all my bearing,
> And braver in all my daring,
> For the patience that in him lies.
> I must be as true as heaven,
> While he is as true as the day,
> Nor balance the gift with the given,
> For he giveth to me alway;
> And I must be firm and steady,
> For my love is that already,
> And I follow him as I may.
> O dear little golden fetter,
> You bind me to difficult things,
> But my soul while it strives grows better,
> And I feel the stirring of wings
> As I stumble, doubting and dreading,
> Up the path of his stronger treading,
> Intent on his beckonings.

This query was also anawered by Mrs. Charles Cleveland Coe, New York.

"The Weaver."

HORATIO G. COZZENS.—I note the inquiry of "F. J. C." in your issue of Sept. 30 as to the authorship, &c., of "The Weaver," and the same may be found in Dick's "Recitations and Readings No. 6." The correct rendering of the first verse is as follows:

> A weaver sat by the side of his loom,
> A-flinging the shuttle fast,
> And a thread that would last till the hour of doom
> Was added at every cast.

Sixteen verses follow this; author's name unknown.

Julia F. McNaughton writes that the poem first appeared in The New York Mirror of March, 1843, and that Emily Chubbuck Judson (Fanny Forester) was the author.

"Man's Highest Triumph"

C. W. F.—"Man's Highest Triumph," asked for by A. F. Tobin in The Times Book Review of Oct. 7, is attributed to Edward Young. See Edwards's "Dictionary of Thoughts," under subject "Death," Page 106.

Two Poems

LOUELLA D. EVERETT.—The two poems sought by Theresa Haggeman as indicated in The Book Review of Sept. 23 are doubtless "Misunderstood," by Maria Upham Drake, and "Nature's Gentleman," by Elisa Cook, copies of which are inclosed.

Copies of the poems kindly sent by Miss Everett have been forwarded to Miss Haggeman.

"Yesterday, Youth, and You"

ESTELLE MUIR.—Replying to Fay Foster's request for the author of "Yesterday, Youth and You," I would say it was written by a friend of mine—Helen Needham. It has been set to music and arranged for a ladies' trio. I have forgotten the name of the composer.

"Aloha Oe!"

GERTRUDE MULLEN.—Here is another translation of the Hawaiian song "Aloha Oe" of Queen Liliuokalani, as made by Charles Earl:

> See the dark clouds are low upon Wau-> kiakia,
> A sign that we two must soon be parted;
> I cannot hide thee in my arm and keep > thee,
> I can only hide that I am broken-hearted.
>
> Farewell to thee, farewell to thee. I shall > always
> Wait for thee among the flowers.
> One fond embrace, one kiss, and then
> Farewell until we meet again.
> Hear the sad moaning of the restless > ocean,
> It but echoes back my lonely sobbing.
> And my heart is still burning with de> votion,
> To cry out against the love we're robbing.

"The Eden Rose"

C. F. H.—There evidently is an error in ascribing the authorship of the poem "The Eden Rose" to Rudyard Kipling. The poem under the title of "The Rose of Eden" was printed anonymously in The St. Louis Globe-Democrat of July 13, 1876. Kipling was born in 1865, and was therefore but thirteen years of age when the poem was printed in the St. Louis paper, and at that early age was not writing poems for publication. Kipling uses a portion of the poem as a heading for his story, "Mrs. Hauksbee Sits Out." The poem is also printed under the title "The Rose of Eden: An Arabic Legend," and has three stanzas.

Information about this poem was also received from Mrs. France Haverly Robertson, Fort Wayne, Ind., and M. L. Deyo, North Adams, Mass.

"Jerusalem"

JEANNETTE B. LORD.—In your issue of Sept. 23 my attention was called to the request made July 29 for the name of the author of the lines beginning:

> When we've been there ten thousand > years.

In a hymnal called the "Millennial Harp," compiled by Joshua V. Himes and published in Boston in 1842, I at once found the stanza referred to in the well-known hymn, "Jerusalem, My Happy Home." Various versions of this hymn occur in several collections, from the "Episcopal Hymnal" to the "Gospel Hymns," but the authorship is recorded as unknown in every case. Also, in none of these hymns occurs the stanza concerning which inquiry was made.

APPEALS TO READERS

K. B. H.—When Dickens was in America he read from his own works various stories, in one of which was the account of a child whose insides rattled as that her friends thought she had swallowed a bead necklace. Can some one of your readers tell me in which book to look for this story?

"Mignonette"

G. C. B.—Will some reader help me to find the little verse as quoted in "The Witching Hour?" I think the first lines are:

> The fragrant odor of mignonette
> The ghost of a dead and gone bouquet,
> Is all that is left to remind us——

Plain People

H. D. VAN BENTHUYSEN.—Can any of your readers tell me where I may find the following lines:

> While nameless rest those people plain,
> Of humble life and simple aim,
> Whose virtues old form bases great
> For lowly thatch and noble state.

"Beautiful Vision"

HOWARD S. WARREN.—Can any of your readers tell me where I can find a poem, and the name of the author, of which the following is a part?

> Beautiful vision! How bright it rose,
> Vision of peaceful and calm repose;
> Well might it brighten the rapt seer's eye,
> And waken his heart to an ecstasy.
> The vines of Judah shall then be pruned,
> Her broken harp be again attuned,
> And listening earth from her father shore,
> Startled not now by the cannon's roar,
> Songs of the angels shall hear again:
> Peace on earth. Good will to men.

A Narrow Life

A. B. S.—Will some kind reader tell me who is the author of these lines, which I found in one of Mr. Rainsford's sermons:

> A life of aspiration furled,
> Of self, in petty self, deep curled
> Amid the struggles of a world.
> A narrow life, a dreamless eye
> That hath no glance on earth or sky
> Save for the pleasures passing by.

"Set Sail"

LOUISE MANNING HODGKINS.—Miss Thomas's excellent verses, "Set Sail," in your issue of Sept. 27 recall a quatrain on the same theme published some years ago. I should be grateful if any reader could give me the author.

> A shipwrecked sailor buried on this coast
> Bids you set sail;
> For many a gallant ship, though' mine > was lost,
> Weathered the gale.

"Acts Heroic"

GEORGE S. SPEYER.—Can some reader tell me who is the author of this verse?

> Deem not that acts heroic wait on chance.
> A man's whole life preludes the single > deed
> That shall decide if his inheritance
> Be with the gifted few of matchless > breed
> Or with the unmotived herd that only > sleep and feed.

An Epitaph

M. R.—This epitaph is on a tombstone in a New England cemetery:

> Where'er she came she brought a spell
> That brightened all the commonplace,
> Where'er she went a silence fell
> And something shadowed every face.

I would like to know where I can find the original of poem out of which it was taken. Can any of your readers help me?

Because They Dared To Hold Honor Above Price!

"I AM an innocent bystander. I have no quarrel with you—none with your enemies. I ask nothing of you—I merely wish to be allowed to till my lands, to keep my industries engaged, to live at peace with the world. I am weak. I am small. I am your prey if you wish to strike. But I shall fight with the fury of a tiger when roused, and I am willing to sacrifice my blood—my life, if need be—to uphold my honor."

Thus spoke Belgium to Germany And because this gallant nation dared to uphold her honor Germany committed the greatest international crime of all history.

The truth about Belgium—about her effort to maintain peace—about her deep-rooted code of honor—about the levelling of her cities—about devastation of her beautiful churches and the murder of her innocent women and children is told truthfully, clearly and forcefully by Hugh Gibson in his book, "The Rape of Belgium," which has just been published."

The RAPE of BELGIUM

A Journal from Our Legation in Belgium

At the time war was declared Mr. Gibson was First Secretary to the American Embassy in Brussels. He was there when the Germans marched into the city and he remained there for almost two years after that city fell into their hands.

He knows the German invaders as they really are. His book records the bombardment of churches, tearing down of public buildings, ravaging, devastating, burning as the Germans went. He tells how entire towns were wiped out of existence over night—how innocent men and women were shot as spies. He describes how the Germans battered down the doors of houses, dragged out the peaceful, law-abiding Belgians, stole everything of value, left houses in ruins, the men dead—the women worse.

No picture of the atrocities committed can be made too horrible—no exaggeration of German wantonness and bestiality is possible. Everything you have ever heard or read about the rape of Belgium is confirmed by Mr. Gibson's diary written while he was right there, forced by neutrality, mutely and helplessly to witness sights that made his blood fairly boil.

Here is a quotation from his book which will give you some idea of the vividness of the pictures he brings before you as you read: "Then we began to see more ghastly sights—poor civilians lying where they had been shot down as they ran—men and women—one old patriarch lying on his back in the sun, his great white beard nearly hiding his swollen face. For three-quarters of a mile the boulevard looked as though it had been swept by a cyclone. Telegraph and telephone wires were down; dead men and horses all over the square; the houses still burning; the broad road covered with wreckage and dead bodies."

And this is no unusual occurrence in Mr. Gibson's life in Brussels. From time to time he was forced to look upon scenes just as revolting. He faithfully set down his experiences from day to day and has now had them printed for our enlightenment.

This book is not a carefully prepared treatise on the war. It does not set out to prove anything. It is merely a private journal jotted down hastily from day to day—but because of its obvious truthfulness and sincerity it keeps one breathlessly interested from beginning to end.

You must read this book. It will give you a better conception of real war conditions than any other book published. It takes you in behind the firing line, amid the bursting shells and roaring cannon—it faithfully pictures for you the ravaged and devastated condition in which the Germans leave a country. It will help you to understand the workings of the German mind whose perverted concept is responsible for this crime against civilization.

Just fill in and mail the coupon or a postal or letter. The book will be sent and charged to your account, all charges prepaid. The Genuine Heath Jacket

A smart, loose-fitting, knit vest for men, following lines of rough-made garments favored by English sportsmen.

The Heath Jacket is a bit of Bond Street set down in America—a duplication of the garment the Englishman considers an indispensable part of his out-door wardrobe. ¶ It is made for service from beautiful heather yarn — rugged—loose fitting—gives warmth without weight. ¶ The Heath Jacket is for those who motor, golf, sail, shoot, fish, hunt, camp or tramp. It appeals to any business-man whose work or play takes him out-doors and who wants to be comfortable without the bother of a "great" coat. ¶ Cut extra long, it protects the kidneys and wards off the colds that are apt to come from chills following exercise. ¶ In many households the Heath Jacket is already an indispensable part of the motor wardrobe, hunting outfit and golf equipment. ¶ The Heath Jacket will last a lifetime—yet, being without bulk, it slips easily into golf-bag, under the seat of the car or into any odd corner of your luggage. ¶ At the better shops $7.50 to $8.50 in dark oxford and the following heathers: — golden brown — wine, dark green and black tinge—green mix (Lovett heather) — red and light blue mix—light blue.

So delicious–it is America's favorite breakfast

FLUFFY, tender, delicately-browned pancakes—how good they taste on a cold morning!

America's favorite breakfast is delicious Aunt Jemima pancakes. They were served over sixty million times last year alone.

Your family, too, will be extra prompt at table if they get a whiff of the delicious, tantalizing fragrance of Aunt Jemima pancakes. How their eyes will sparkle when they see the golden-brown pancakes steaming on their plates.

When they taste them they will wonder how you learned the secret of the old-time cooks of the South, for only the Southern pancakes we have all heard praised can compare in flavor with the cakes you can make with Aunt Jemima Pancake Flour.

The individual flavor of Aunt Jemima pancakes which makes them seem to "melt in your mouth" is due to the special formula. It was worked out with one idea in mind—to make perfect pancakes.

Everything is mixed in the flour, even the sweet milk. All the ingredients have been accurately measured and scientifically blended. You need no eggs, no milk. Just add water, and your batter is ready to make delicious always-good pancakes with the real Aunt Jemima flavor.

Tomorrow have these pancakes or the equally delicious Aunt Jemima buckwheat cakes. Hear your family call them the best cakes they ever ate. Aunt Jemima Mills Company, St. Joseph, Missouri.

222,150 VICTIMS

Park Row and Frankfort Street, New York—the busiest corner in the world.

Every evening 296,200 men and women pass this corner.

Three out of every four—222,150 men and women—are tired out. They are victims of the city because they have not adapted themselves to modern city life. They are listless; their footsteps are heavy; all the energy they brought to work in the morning is gone.

But the fourth person is full of energy. His eye is as bright, his step is as springy as when he started out to work in the morning.

This is why three-fourths of these men and women you see crossing Park Row—or anywhere in the city—are "all in" when their day's work is done: they pound away their energy on hard pavements, with hard leather heels. Leather heels are out of date; they are not suited to modern city conditions.

8,000 energy wastes a day

When you bring your hard leather heels down—as the average city dweller does—8,000 times a day, you shock 8,000 units of energy from your system. This makes a very serious energy waste by the end of the day. The 222,150 men and women who drag their tired bodies home every night owe their fatigue, in a large measure, to energy wasted by the use of hard leather heels.

The fourth person—the one with energy left—the one who walks, talks, and looks as if he were enjoying life has surplus energy. He has not jolted his energy away. He is wearing O'Sullivan's Heels.

You may join this one out of four class by having O'Sullivan's Heels put on your shoes at once. You'll find your work easy and your energy greater. You'll be able to walk to your home with an elastic step. By absorbing the 8,000 daily shocks, these heels will give you the added energy you want.

The best heels for city wear

The heels best suited to modern hard pavements and floors are O'Sullivan's Heels.

They are guaranteed to outlast any other heels. They will last three times as long as leather heels and will give uniformly satisfactory service to the very last.

Because of our special process, these heels combine the greatest durability with the greatest resiliency. They are made of perfect heel material.

Buy your shoes O'Sullivanized. Good dealers sell the latest style shoes with O'Sullivan's Heels already attached. Have these heels put on all your shoes at once. Every day you delay putting on O'Sullivan's Heels you are wasting your most valuable asset—Energy.

In black, white or tan: for man, women and children. Insist on O'Sullivan's—avoid the disappointment of substitutes.

What has he said to her?

BRILLIANT lights revealing every grace and every flaw; eyes fixed upon you ready to admire—can you face them unembarrassed?

Don't spoil your evening wondering about your complexion. Descend the stairs to meet your friends radiant and blooming—thrilled by the knowledge that you are looking your best.

You can have this confidence

Any young girl has a right to a soft glowing skin. Youth should not endure the thought of wrinkles, of colorless faces, of blemishes of any sort. Constant care of the skin in youth insures a clear, fresh complexion later.

Work up a good soapy lather in your hands with Woodbury's Facial Soap.

You can make your skin what you will. Nature does her part. You can do the rest. Every day the old skin dies and new skin forms in its place. What this new skin is depends on the care you give it.

Does your glowing face cause an exclamation of pleasure?

Skin specialists say that the best way to build up a clear, beautiful complexion, to keep the skin in a healthy, active condition, is by proper cleansing and stimulating treatments with a soap carefully prepared to suit the nature of the skin.

Rub the lather in well, always with an upward and outward movement.

Woodbury's Facial Soap was prepared by a skin specialist after 30 years of experience with the skin and its needs.

Let this treatment give you the charm of a flawless skin

Begin tonight to get the benefits of this skin specialist's soap for your skin. Use this Woodbury treatment every night and watch your skin lose every flaw; watch it take on a smooth texture, a soft glowing color.

Lather your washcloth well with Woodbury's Facial Soap and warm water. Apply it to your face and distribute the lather thoroughly. With the tips of your fingers work this cleansing antiseptic lather into your skin, always using an upward and outward motion. Rinse with warm water, then with cold—the colder the better. If possible, finish by rubbing your face for a few minutes with a piece of ice. Always be careful to dry your skin well.

After rinsing with warm water and then cold, rub your face for a few moments with a piece of ice.

A 25 cent cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap is sufficient for a month of this treatment. Get a cake today. It is for sale at druggists and toilet counters everywhere in the United States and Canada. Watch your skin gradually improve so you can face the most glaring light, the most critical eyes — confident of its smoothness and freshness.

5c brings you a week's treatment

For 5c we will send you a sample cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap large enough to last a week. Write today. Address The Andrew Jergens Co., 5115 Spring Grove Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Lillian Russell's OWN
SMOOTHOUT CREAM

It Velvetizes the Skin

"Youth rises up triumphant in the most neglected skin after a few refreshing treatments with my own Smoothout Cream. Clogged pores are cleansed, irritations allayed, and the skin smoothed by this soothing refreshing cream which liquefies as soon as it touches the face.

"Pat my Smoothout Cream into your cheeks and neck. It brings the blood to the surface, tones the tissues, refines the pores and restores to your face muscles the youthful elasticity necessary to smooth firm cheeks. Smoothout fortifies the skin against the wind and sun.

"Try a complexion bath of Smoothout Cream—you'll discover a new thrill and you'll make Smoothout a daily habit."

Whose Job Is The Harder?

After a cheery breakfast you are off to your business and return again weary at night to find a steaming dinner awaiting you.

Little does your wife realize the hard bludgeonings of a man's business day. Equally little do you know of the hundred and one things that go on behind the scenes in your household in order that it may be an efficient and cheerful home for you.

You are interested only in the results—that your coffee is good, not what percolator your wife uses; that your house is clean, not what vacuum cleaner made it so. "You should worry" about where the receipt of that wonderful dessert came from. You get the benefit, and that's enough.

That perplexing question in your daughter's musical education—it was answered by an expert. The result is all you are interested in.

Yet the children's clothes did not plan themselves. Your wife's flower garden, which adds so much to the place, did not "just grow." When your bed-room was "done over," you were saved the expense of an interior decorator.

Perhaps you have not given much thought to the very difficult business of being a housewife. But for many years we have. The Delineator is a practical expert adviser on the perplexing problems of household affairs, depended upon and trusted in by more than a million progressive American homes. Without it such efficiency and economy in these homes would be impossible.

The Delineator tells the housewife all that modern science and art know about foods. It gives her constantly the newest ideas on home furnishing and decoration; it supplies scientific information on the care and upbringing of children; it makes it possible for women to make their own and their children's clothing. In The Delineator there are twenty-five regular departments each conducted by an expert.

Thousands of progressive women write us each month for advice on home problems and each one receives a personal reply from an expert qualified to give counsel.

The reason for The Delineator's extraordinary influence in a million homes is no secret. The answer is Service.

Take advantage of this service for your home. Let The Delineator save dollars in your household and bring hours of happy entertainment each month to the whole family.

The Home-Coming Guest

for the Thanksgiving feast may be worrying you if your guest-room facilities are already taxed to their limit. Solve the problem by buying a Stickley Extension Daybed, which will fit in beautifully with any furnishing scheme in any living-room, library or den (many styles to choose from), and at night is transformed with the utmost ease into a full-size double-bed of absolute comfort. Under the seat is a sliding drawer with spring and mattress (unnoticed when closed), which is easily pulled out with one hand, and then lifted with a slight effort to the level of the seat, thus forming a complete bed as firm and as fully equipped as any bedstead. This is an exclusive feature not to be found in any other daybed. Add to this the famous beauty of design and Chromewald finish and perfection of craftsmanship which have made the name of Stickley the high-water mark of American furniture-making, and the desirability of seeing the Stickley Daybed before purchasing becomes clearly evident. WILL your home really look "inviting" to your Thanksgiving guests when they come in sight of it? Will it have a warm and cosy look of welcome, or a forbidding bareness? The time of the year is no longer an excuse; most folks have been educated to know that Evergreens, which keep the lawn looking pleasant all year round, are cheap to buy and easy to plant—and they expect your home to be just as genial and cordial on the outside as it is within. Moreover, the lawn and grounds are part of the attractions of the home you will want to show them off to your guests. And they will compliment you not for lavishness of expenditure or the quantity of your plants but for your good taste in the choice of shrubs and trees and the beauty and effectiveness of their arrangement. And we are quite sure we can help you to make sure of that, as we have for so many others, from the biggest Long Island estate millionaires to the small suburban lot owners,—and we know that the amount of money spent has very little to do with it. So phone us tomorrow or write us today, and if you are not too far away, we'll "dress up" your lawn before Thanksgiving Day.

This woman wore hers three years!

"Incredible!" you say, unless you wear Kayser Italian Silk Underwear yourself.

The wearing quality of Kayser Italian Silk Underwear is due to these fundamental facts: There is more silk in Kayser's than in any other silk underwear; each garment is cut individually and carefully tailored and fits the figure correctly.

The result is that a Kayser Italian Silk garment when properly washed and cared for will far outwear ordinary underwear. Thousands of women have learned to look upon Kayser Italian Silk Underwear as a genuine economy.

Always look for the label

Insist on seeing the label on every piece of silk underwear you purchase. The genuine Italian Silk Underwear bears a label in every garment plainly marked "Kayser Italian Silk". One blue star on the label indicates the lighter weight silk—three stars the heavier weight.

THE LIBERTY TAX

America's War Levy, in Full Force Next Saturday, Is Estimated at Three and a Half Billion Dollars

HAVING arranged for the nearly $6,000,000,000 of Liberty bonds which the future must pay as its share of the outlay of the United States in the first year of the war, the Government is now perfecting details for digging into the pockets of the present generation for $3,500,000,000 more—the Liberty Tax.

That is what Daniel C. Roper, the Internal Revenue Commissioner, nicknamed the greatest tax-raising measure ever enacted when it came to him from Congress for administration and enforcement under the homdrum caption of "an act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes." He makes no apology to the Secretary of the Treasury for describing the tax in the same way that Mr. McAdoo characterized the bonds, because, he says, they are both for exactly the same purpose and should be so considered by the public, which has subscribed to the one and now must pay the other. He also says that it is a case of war taxes or war indemnity to Germany.

As is clearly shown by its title, the law is purely a war measure and, as such, is a tremendous experiment rather than a finished product. The perfecting process will have to come later. That is freely admitted by the members of Congress who had most to do with framing the law and by the Government officials who are to administer it and discover its shortcomings.

Defects are expected to develop here and there as the measure comes against the test of actual operation, and, no doubt, needed changes will be submitted to the Congress which is to begin next week. In the meantime the country has got a most comprehensive device for bringing in revenue, and Commissioner Roper is organizing a vast administrative machine for bringing into the United States Treasury every penny that the law calls for. The old, ontgrown Internal Revenue Bureau would never have sufficed for the job now in hand. That was a bureau formerly known of by the public only in the vaguest way as something that had to do with dark, greenish blue stamps that went on cigar boxes and whisky barrels. We shall all know about it presently in a very definite way.

There is a different twist now to the old saying about death and taxes. The more of these new taxes we pay and the quicker we pay them, the fewer will be the deaths of American soldiers over in Europe.

With the end of the present week, on Dec. 1, the entire tax law will be in full effect, with the exception of the provision for increased postage on second-class mail matter, which will become operative next July. The only other provision of the law not yet in force is for stamp taxes on stocks, bonds, and various legal documents. That will begin to operate next Saturday. But it is not expected to produce more than about $20,000,000, and the revenue yields of the added second-class postage, beginning with next Summer, are estimated to produce only $10,000,000. All the other provisions of the law have been going into effect, on different dates, since Oct. 3, the day the bill was signed by the President. Therefore, except for $30,000,000 of yield, the full tax is already on. And what are $30,000,000 in these days? A mere reminder of an old song about thirty something else.

Of course, the estimate that the war tax will yield about $3,500,000,000 is, at best, only a good guess. Nobody can tell exactly what it will yield until the law has been in effect for a twelvemonth. But it is an estimate based on a thousand and one of the best guides as to the business of the country and on the best indications of the earning power of all the people.

Furthermore, it is the total of two other estimates, one that the internal revenue income for the current year under the old law will be $750,000,000, and that the additions to that in the coming year because of the new law will be $2,800,000,000. The actual internal revenue receipts under the old law for the last fiscal year, 1916, were $512,702,028.78. It is an entirely conservative piece of figuring to add $250,000,000 to that for the yield of the present year.

So the Government is now in position to figure pretty closely as to what it is to have from all sources already assured for all purposes in the coming year. It works out this way:

From Liberty bond, already issued	$6,000,000,000
From Liberty tax	3,500,000,000
War Savings Certificates	200,000,000
From customs duties	210,000,000
Extra postage to general fund	80,000,000
Total	$9,990,000,000

In his recent speech before the Investment Bankers Association, Secretary McAdoo said that not more than another $10,000,000,000 would have to be raised for the current year by additional bond issues and Treasury certificates.

The extra postage item in the table is obtained from the $70,000,000 expected to come from the added penny on first-class letter postage, which went into effect on the 3d of this month, and from the second-class increase already referred to. The estimate of $210,000,000 of customs duties is based on the total receipts of $225,000,000 from this source for the last fiscal year. Imports, of course, have fallen off because of the growing stringency of war conditions, and the Custom Houses, about the middle of the present fiscal year, show $11,000,000 less than for the corresponding period of last year. But the best part of the customs year will begin next month with the sugar imports. Also, a material increase of trade from Japan is looked for. So, for the entire year, the experts figure that we will not go more than $12,000,000 or $15,000,000 behind last year on import duties.

By far the biggest single item in the long list included in the Liberty tax total is the estimated return from the excess war profits tax to be levied on business as from Jan. 1, 1917. This, alone, will be well over $1,000,000,000. The next, in size, will be the total yield of the personal income tax, which is estimated at $650,000,000. Under the new law which taxes the income of every unmarried man down to $1,000, and of every married man down to $2,000, there will be at least 7,000,000 more individuals paying income taxes than there were under the old law. The yield from corporation income taxes will be over $500,000,000. There are the three leading items—excess profits, corporation incomes, and personal incomes. Both of the latter taxes are also levied on the incomes for the year beginning with January, 1917.

The next largest estimate is of the tax on alcoholic beverages. It totals $296,000,000, and went into effect on Oct. 4. The war tax on tobacco in its various forms is expected to yield $65,000,000. That went into effect in part on Oct. 4, and in full on Nov. 2.

The war excise taxes, commonly called the commodity taxes, all went into effect on the day the bill became law.

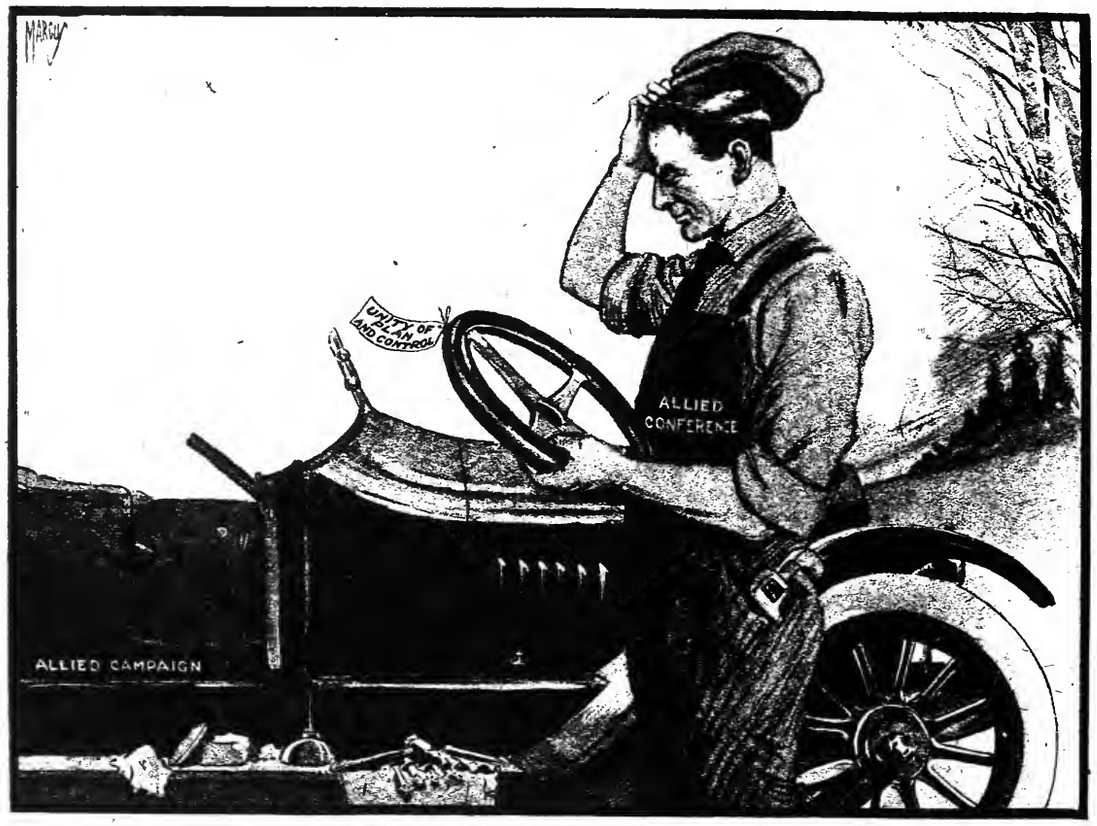
Commissioner Roper, Who Says It Is a Choice Between War Taxes and a War Indemnity to Germany.



The New Steering Wheel

They are expected to yield about $60,000,000. This commodity provision covers automobiles, motor cycles, musical instruments, phonographs, motion-picture films, jewelry, sporting goods, pleasure boats, proprietary medicines, perfumery and cosmetics, chewing gum, and cameras.

Taxing of club dues and admissions to theatres, concerts, and film shows, which began Nov. 1, is expected to yield something over $50,000,000.

Estimates of the taxes on facilities furnished by insurance and public utility companies, such as railroad freight and passenger traffic, telephone and telegraph service, and pipe line transportation, amount, all told, to $170,000,000.

The tax on munitions manufacturers, which will be abolished after the first year, will yield about $25,000,000, and inheritance taxes $5,000,000. The smallest item in the list of estimates is that of $20,000, which the tax on the products of our new Virgin Islands is expected to add to the grand total. To put it in table form we have this:

Excess profits	$1,200,000,000
Personal income tax	650,000,000
Corporation income tax	500,000,000
Alcoholic beverages	296,000,000
Commodity taxes	60,000,000
Dues and admissions	50,000,000
Public utility services	170,000,000
Munitions manufacturers	25,000,000
Inheritance taxes	5,000,000
Virgin Island products	20,000
Total	$2,956,020,000

Now, add to that total the $750,000,000 of internal revenue under the old law, and you get the more than $3,500,000,000 which are expected from the war taxes.

Commissioner Roper had another name for the tax in addition to Liberty when he was asked the other day something about the reorganization of his bureau for the handling of the new work.

"It is," he said, "a case of war revenue taxes or a war indemnity to Germany. That is the real issue involved, and it ought to be made clear to the American people, because in the final analysis it is up to the American people to decide this issue. The amount of the tax imposed upon every American citizen is the amount the people themselves have, through their representatives in Congress, determined to be his share of the expense of this war in defense of his home. To do less than pay his share promptly and fully would be unpatriotic.

"The alternative to war revenue taxes is war indemnity to Germany, and as burdensome as it may seem to pay war taxes, this burden is insignificant as compared with the burden that would be imposed upon our people for generations in paying the colossal war indemnity that Germany would demand if that nation were successful in this war. There is more than money involved in this matter. Germany would not only impose an oppressive financial burden upon our people for generations, but would make our people slaves to the German system."

Mr. Roper was formerly the textile expert of the United States Census Bureau. As an expert he was called in to assist in framing many of the schedules of the Underwood tariff. He devised the Government's system, now in force, for gathering and tabulating cotton statistics at the ginneries. He added to his store of exact knowledge of the business of the country by serving as clerk of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce. As First Assistant Postmaster General he was in charge of the administration of all local Post Offices. Then he became Chairman of Organization in the Democratic National Committee for the last Presidential campaign. After that he was made Vice Chairman of the United States Tariff Commission.

J. H. Callan, formerly of the Post Office Department, is now acting as assistant to the Commissioner in rebuilding the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Under their reorganization the office force has grown from 696 to 737 and the field force from 4,185 to 4,973 since July. It is assumed that by next July the number of Government employes engaged in the work of finding and collecting the $3,500,000,000 of taxes will have grown to an office force of 1,500 and a field force of 8,100.

Of course nobody knows yet what it is going to cost to collect the tax, but an estimate can be based on the cost of collecting the internal revenue of a little more than $500,000,000 in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916. The expense to the Government that year was about $7,000,000. It figured out to a cost of $1.40 for collecting every $100. At that same rate it would cost $49,600,000 to collect $3,500,000,000. But that probably is too low. The present and future difficulties of finding the things and the moneys to be taxed will be greater in proportion than they used to be. Consider for just one example of that fact—the 7,000,000 added payers of personal income taxes. They will include hundreds of thousands of skilled artisans and mechanics, who move about from job to job and city to city. But the information concerning their earnings must come from all the various concerns by which they have been employed in the course of the year.

When the new Commissioner assumed charge of the bureau late in September he began by calling in the most progressive chiefs of divisions and, with their help, analyzing the whole organization. Then followed a general readjustment and realignment of the different departments with reference to the subject matter of each—the income tax, the beverage tax, and so on throughout the entire list of taxes, each group of which calls for specialized and expert handling. More specifically, the bureau was divided into six co-ordinate units as follows: First, excess profits and personal and corporation income taxes; second, tobacco, spirits, estate, and capital stock taxes; third, commodity sales taxes, public utility services taxes, and miscellaneous; fourth, supervisor of Collectors' Offices; fifth, chief of revenue agents; sixth, supervisor of business co-operation.

The legal division has been reorganized also, and in addition to the paid lawyers which constitute it there is a volunteer group of some of the greatest lawyers of the country, who have offered to help the bureau, without compensation.

The sixth unit or division of the bureau, supervisor of business co-operation mentioned in the above enumeration, is something entirely new. The work of this division will be to organize the volunteer patriotic assistance offered to the Government by corporations and individuals in the way of suggestions as to how the law may be improved.

The net results of the findings of this division of business co-operation will, no doubt, serve as useful material in guiding Congress in its needed modifications of the law. The sixth division will also be the pacifier between the Government and the public, and will handle all complaints. It is intended that it shall be a real pacifier and conciliator and not dismiss just grievances with mere perfunctory rubber-stamp replies. Furthermore, its work will be educational, for there is much to be done to explain to the public just what the law requires of each one of us. Theoretically, the law requires each of us to pay the taxes, and it does not require the Government to hunt them up and go after them. But if the Internal Revenue Bureau folded its hands and depended on that theory it would never collect $3,500,000,000.

GERMAN SPIES WHO TALK PEACE

Employed to Make Tools of Pacifists and Unthinking Workmen, Says A. Curtis Roth, Formerly American Vice Consul at Plauen

ABOUT 99 per cent. of the Americans are uninformed. And when they are uninformed and emotional, the German peace drive goes straight at them."

A. Curtis Roth, for seven years Vice Consul of the United States at Plauen, in Germany, and during those years "like one of the family," as he says, among German officers, police and Government officials and Secret Service men, has brought back to this country a solemn warning against German manoeuvres, not for war alone, but most of all for peace. It is a warning directed against American ignorance, American sentimentality, American good-nature and good-will. For of all those things, he points out, the German secret agents take advantage, and the German secret agent is something absolutely outside of the American's ken, in nothing more than in his use of the name of peace to serve the most insidious ends of war.

"There is nothing in the world like the German spy system," Mr. Roth said. "In this country we can't understand it. We can't grasp it unless we have lived with it and seen it work. That is why we are in danger from it. That is why I want to warn Americans especially about this 'peace' business.

"For the most menacing and insidious part of all the German spy and propaganda system, it seems to me, is that it does not only use Germans. It uses Americans. It uses neutrals, and other nationals. And the good-natured and gullible American is the natural prey of the German 'peace' propaganda. He is being used to sow dissension and thus weaken his own country.

"It is not the German-American, the man of German descent who has been brought up in this country, whom we have to fear. It is the man who has, whatever his ancestry, come under the influence of German national ideals and life. It is not, in other words, the nationality, but the life of the nation, that makes a difference. I think myself that in most cases the Americans of German parentage, who have themselves lived all their lives in this country, are harmless; they don't know anything about Germany except what they have heard from their parents, and they have never lived under the German system that makes a man a machine. But the Irish who hate England, the Swedes with German sympathies, the German Swiss who are for Germany in this war, the Americans who let themselves be taken in and influenced by German propaganda—they're dangerous. That is, they're dangerous if they follow German ideas and German leaders.

"'As a matter of fact,' Mr. Roth said seriously, 'when I was in Germany I knew two Americans who were actually in the German Secret Service. One was in Berlin and one in Rumania. They were very able, too.

"As for this country, and the German activities here," Mr. Roth continued, "I learned enough of German methods while I was in Germany to be convinced that the Germans know our country better than we know it ourselves. They know all about our Congress. They know our labor situation. They know our educational institutions, our city and State Governments and conditions, our public men. They know all these things to a point where they have them card-catalogued and indexed.

"And in their peace propaganda here, which, as every one knows, they have been carrying on since the war broke out in Europe, they know how to proceed. They know what men they can influence. They know what they can do in situations of labor unrest. They know where they can use discontent and where they can use the good-will and sentimentality of emotional and ignorant men and women. Their object is to keep us from being united. They are smart about it. They have been practicing and thinking all this secret service work for years. Dissension among the Allies and internal friction in the allied countries—that is what is back of it all, and that is what they are depending on to win the war.

"Not a German that I ever talked with doubts that Germany will win this war. And they believe that Germany will be victorious because they are banking so strong on German unity and allied lack of unity.

"That is what they are playing up in their 'peace' propaganda here, and that is why the German Secret Service agent, clever as he is in every way, seems to me to be a greater menace to us in his peace drive than in any other form of activity. As peace enthusiast and labor agitator, he is a great peril.

"And it is not, as I said in the first place, only the German. The trouble with the German Secret Service is that it does not depend on Germans alone. The Germans work upon the ignorant element in the native or resident population. I know that a great many so-called 'peace' agitators and organizers in this country are in it for money. Some I believe to be paid by Germany. Others get large sums of money through 'contributions to the cause.'

A Curtis Roth, Who Tells of Germany's Vast System for Boosting Mock Peace Talk.

"But for the great mass of Americans, I think the man who is really most dangerous is the man who is absolutely sincere, and who has been made the dupe of German influence. He is the emotional man, the man who knows nothing about war, the man who has always lived in an amiable, free, peaceable country, and to whom war is 'the most terrible thing in the world.' It is unspeakably horrible to him that any nation should set out to 'kill people.' He means well. But he is opposed to our fighting the Germans, or any one, because war is 'so horrible.' Well, war is horrible. It is horrible that we are in this war. The only thing is, it would be more horrible if we were not in it. We are fighting Germany because we have got to fight Germany. One of the things I became convinced of before I left Germany was that they wanted to get us into the war. And if those uninformed emotional pacifists were sent to Germany for two or three weeks, they'd all want to fight Germany tooth and nail!

"'We have well-manned organizations in the lands of our enemies and in neutral countries,' my friend of the Secret Service told me,' and when it is to our interest we shall build up such a peace sentiment as to be irresistible. Isn't it funny that we, a people bred to war and today waging war upon such an unprecedented scale, should at the same time be carrying on a peace propaganda greater than any the world has ever known?'"

It is this peace propaganda that Mr. Roth regards as our greatest danger from Germany. We must deeply fear the Germans even when bearing gifts, he tells us.

Of his own experiences, and of how he learned how easy it was for a foreign resident to gather information, he spoke along the same line.

"I was like one of the family in the Plauen district," he said. "The Secret Service man whom I quoted I knew well for years. I knew the Mayors, the police officials, army men, all kinds of prominent people, and from them I learned both what was going on in their own country and much of what their spies were doing all over the world. They told me about their work in Russia, and the victories it had brought them, though of course that was long before these latest happenings there. They told me about the activities in enemy countries, and information gathered in neutral lands. And at the same time they used to chat with me about their own army operations. I knew what was going on in Russia and Serbia, what the casualties were from day to day. I knew long ago that submarine warfare would be resumed. Of course they did not tell me concrete things about the workings of their system in the United States; there was a point beyond which they could not go. But they made it all sufficiently plain. They work, you see, through their diplomatic officials and their many reserve officers who are living in foreign countries in peace time, and in neutral lands in time of war, and gather information constantly, to say nothing of spreading propaganda through these persons. I have spoken of their use of neutrals.

"What America ought to do," he added, "is to get hold of the Germans in this country who are at the back of the German peace propaganda, and send them back to Germany, and keep them from entering the United States again. Interning them isn't enough. They ought to be deported. And if we get rid of the leaders, we'll have little trouble enough, I think, with the common people of German nationality. They are sheep. Their system has made them mechanical toys. They will do anything a man of the officer class tells them to do. But without him they will do nothing. Mix with the Germans here. Find and deport their leaders. That is the only way to free this country from the menace of false peace movements that are one of Germany's great means to try to win the war."

Two More "Mayor's Lamps"

AN old privilege which will be revived with the accession of Judge John F. Hylan as Mayor will be the placing of two lamps in front of his residence at 959 Bushwick Avenue, Brooklyn, and their maintenance by the municipality as long as he or the immediate members of his family live in the house.

The custom dates back to the early days of the Dutch Burgomasters. It is supposed to have originated with the lantern bearers who were accustomed to escort the Burgomaster home with proper dignity from the historic city tavern or other places of genial entertainment. The lanterns were then left in front of the residence as a warning to any boisterous members of the town not to disturb the rest of the official ruler of the city.

The Mayor's lamp privilege was never enjoyed by Mayor Mitchel, as he has been an apartment dweller during his incumbency. So far as is known, Mayor Van Wyck was the only Mayor entitled to the lamps who refused to accept them, on the ground that they no longer served any useful purpose.

There are now Mayor's lamps on the residences of four former Mayors, none of whom is living, but which are occupied by members of the family. They are on the former homes of W. H. Wickham, 338 Lexington Avenue, near Thirty-ninth Street; William R. Grace, 31 East Seventy-ninth Street; Abram S. Hewitt, southeast corner of Lexington Avenue and Twenty-second Street, and Hugh J. Grant, 20 East Seventy-second Street.

The only other home of a former Mayor in front of which the old lamps are still standing is at 4 Gramercy Park, the home of James Harper, who was Mayor in 1844. He lived in Rose Street at that time, but moved about 1854 to the Gramercy Park house, and up to a few years ago the residence was occupied by members of the Harper family. The lamps in front of Mayor Seth Low's house, on the southwest corner of Madison Avenue and Sixty-fourth Street, were removed just before his death, as he had given up the house as a residence, and it was altered for business purposes.

German Philosophy Reverts to Brute Force

Logical to a Certain Point, Its Fatal Flaw Is Rejection of Community Progress Which Constitutes Civilization

The following address (slightly abbreviated here) on the German evolutionary philosophy of the superior State was delivered by Major Crile at a recent meeting of physicians and their wives, under the auspices of the New York State Committee, Medical Section of the Council of National Defense, at the Waldorf-Astoria. Major Crile, who is one of America's foremost surgeons, is director of Base Hospital No. 4, in France, had just returned for a brief stay in the United States, after six months at the front. Since 1914 he has practically given up his time to war work. He was one of the first American surgeons to enlist for relief work in the European war, having sailed from New York on Dec. 30, 1914, at the head of the unit organized by Samuel Mather of Cleveland.

WE are in war, but war is only a part of that in which we are involved; we are in a revolution of the moral, social, educational, and political systems of the great human race. War is the expression of but one phase of this fateful revolution. If we are to survive and remain free, we must accurately valne our own creed and the creed of our enemy, to the end that we may strengthen the foundation and augment the superstructure of our civilization.

Our enemy is guided by a definite and published philosophy. We must therefore establish and publish clearly our own philosophy. We must examine the validity of the principles for which we are contending, as well as of those against which we are contending. We must know the truth—are we right, or is our enemy right? Is there a flaw in the premises of the German State philosophy?

Through the schools and through the universities the ideas of the German philosophers, of Nietzsche and of Treitschke, in particular, have created a state of mind peculiar to Germany. This state of mind, in which religious elements are combined with biologic concepts, is the result, in part, of the implantation of the seeds of Darwin's theory of the survival of the fittest, in the struggle for existence, upon the intensely religious German mind.

The German adaptation of Darwin's conception may be expressed as follows: In nature the strongest and the most clever species of animal is best adapted for existence, hence that species survives and its competitors perish. German philosophy assumes that, among the peoples of the earth, the Germans, collectively and individually, are the strongest and the most clever. They conclude, therefore, that the German people are the fittest to survive; and that they, therefore, have the right to exercise their higher survival qualities. In the exercise of this right they conclude that they are entitled to take from other nations, by methods of peace or of war, their land, their wealth, their very existence itself, since this is the logical right of the fittest animal engaged in the struggle for survival. The German State philosophy not only assumes the right but holds it as duty to thus extend dominion by force over other people. Comparing the migrated German individual with individuals of other stock, we hold that the efficiency of the German State is not the result of any superiority of the German stock to the Anglo-Saxon or to the Latin stock, but that it is due to the establishment of an organization in which, by a type of collective effort, the individual, to a greater degree than is true of the individual in any other State, has given up his initiative—his will—to the State, which has been governed by an able and an honest ruling class. In other words, Germany has established what she calls a Kultur, by means of which a superior State has been created out of good average human beings. Therefore, when the Germans speak of their rights as those of the fittest, they refer to their State rather than to the individuals of that State.

For the purpose of our argument, let us accept the German premise that, at this period of history, the German State is the most highly efficient — in agriculture, in manufacture, in learning, in art, in science, and in war. Now, if in the last analysis might does give right, do the inexorable laws of evolution apply to human beings as they apply to lower animals and plants? Is force right?

Nothing but force gives the wolf the right to the life of the sheep; nothing but force gives the sheep the right to the grass; nothing but force gives the grass the right to the soil. On the basis of evolution alone, what gives man the right to take the milk from the cow or the wool from the sheep? What gives man the right to enslave animals; to kill millions of animals without their consent — not for their good, but for the good of man? What gives man the right to occupy the earth so completely to the disadvantage of many other worthy animals? FORCE and the ability to use that force to the advantage of man—that is the exercise of man's qualities of fitness. What gave our forefathers the right to dispossess the American Indian of a continent, not for the good of the Indian, but for the good of our ancestors; not at the request, nor with the consent of the Indian, but by the exercise, on the part of our ancestors, of greater fitness to survive? Within the period of history we have seen weaker races yield to stronger, fitter races. There is evidence that this occurred even more strikingly in prehistoric ages.

Dr. George W. Crile, Famous Surgeon of Cleveland, Now a Major in the Medical Reserve Corps.

Does it, then, follow that the German State is justified in exercising its superior fitness for survival against its less fit neighboring States? The German premise is this—Germany has established the fittest State for survival; Germany, therefore, has the right to exercise her survival faculties.

If this premise can be proved, then Germany is right; and this premise will be proved to be either true or false. It will be proved, not by theoretic considerations, but by the verdict of the present struggle. If the German wins permanently, then his premise becomes an established fact, and the German philosophers are right. The German supremacy would then be established, just as one species of plants or animals establishes its supremacy over another species when it migrates into the territory of the other. Evolution has always declared the victor to be right, and the present status of the numerous plants and animals that now occupy the earth is right, because of the exercise of their superior fitness to survive.

In the German premise, might is synonymous with fitness to survive. It is the fittest that survives, and it is true in nature that, in most instances, the fittest are the mightiest. This is true of most plants, of most trees; it is true of most animals. But it is equally true that some of the mightiest animals have proved less fit in the struggle than their competitors with other qualities. Even among the lower animals might does not always win.

The German philosopher, however, may say that intellectual might is as important as muscular might. This is true, and if Germany loses the present struggle it will not be because of a lack of physical or intellectual force or for want of cooperation or sacrifice of her people, but for another reason equally potent and based on the same biologic principle.

Let us recall the qualities that have enabled man to struggle successfully with other competing species. Compared with the animals over whom he has established his supremacy, man is not so strong, he is not so fleet, he is not so prolific, he is not so well equipped with means of defense or with means of offense. Compared with certain of these animals he is inferior in muscular power, in the sense of smell, of hearing, of sight, of touch, and in his means of protection against cold and heat and rain. He is less protected against disease and he is shorter lived. Man has no protecting carapace. He has no repellent odor. He has no sharp claws and no powerful teeth. He climbs a tree awkwardly. He is timid in water. In each of his several physical qualities he is outclassed by many animals.

If survival depended only upon might, a band of powerful gorillas would prevail over any band of men, just as the keen senses, the powerful limbs, the prowess of the lion have made him the ruler over less powerfully equipped animals.

As the fierce struggles during the evolution of animals progressed, man rose rapidly through the development of his master organ of strategy—the brain—and the evolution of his hands. In his brain was found the efficient substitute for teeth and claws, for fleetness and for keen senses.

Thus, in time, the caveman, the bushman, and the tribe developed.

Up to this point there is no flaw in the German logic, for, up to this point, the mightiest family and the mightiest tribe were right.

These primitive ancestors, however, were able to dominate but a limited environment; they barely held their own against many competing animals. In time certain momentous developments in the vast history of man occurred, viz., the discovery and control of fire, the cultivation of useful plants, the domestication of animals, the manufacture of simple tools. With these advances there developed an increasingly rapid control over the forces of nature and the human race began to multiply more rapidly. Instead of running away or fighting with his muscles, man learned more and more how to circumvent his enemies. One after another, useful additions were made to man's reactions, which, in turn, were augmented by his children.

As the means of controlling the forces of nature increased in number and as the handicraft and the machinery became more numerous and more nearly complete, as the work of man became more specialized and his needs more complex, he became increasingly dependent upon his fellows. Gradually there developed the most dominating of all the adaptations of man—the community adaptation—community behavior. The primary community reaction is co-operation through the division of labor with the exchange of the products of labor. This was the origin of justice. There could arise no code of laws among naked fruit-eating natives. With the railways and telegraphs, with the unfolding of physics and chemistry, with discovery and invention, man became increasingly dependent upon his fellow-men, and the principles of justice and mutual dependence became correspondingly intensified.

Thus it came to pass that those people were fittest who became the most completely adapted to gregarious life, viz., those who were most truthful and honest, just and diligent.

Primitive individualistic reaction, nevertheless, as against community reaction, still appeared; in fact, it appears frequently even now. This is the origin of selfishness, of stealing, of killing, &c. The community punished the individualistic—the selfish reactions—through co-operation, just as the community secures a living through co-operation.

As an adaptation against the strong individualistic selfish reactions, religions have been evolved. The great success of the teachings of Christ, of Boddha, of Mohammed, of all religious leaders, is due to the fact that fairness and honesty and justice are the foundations of community prosperity. Religions aim to develop altruism in their adherents—their duty to the race as well as to themselves. The greater the extent to which a people react to the good of the race the fitter are they to survive.

If an individual unjustly takes through stealth or by force what belongs to his neighbor, if he slays his neighbor, a protective reaction is awakened in the community against that individual. He is isolated from his fellows. He may even be killed for the general good, because he is unfitted for the community stage of evolution. But he is fitted for the life of the lower animals, the life of primitive man.

The individual who is most fair and just, most useful to his race—that individual is most fitted to survive. The successful dominance of the earth by man is due to the fact that, through experience, through religion, through training by parents and fellow-men, the majority of human beings strive to make the race better and to strengthen the bonds of social cohesion, or at least they do not strive to destroy social cohesion.

If nations are only multiples of individuals, if what is true of the individual is true of the nation, then we may find in this a possible flaw in the premises of the German State philosophy. If the same standard is applied to the State as to the individual, then Germany is less fit to survive than many other nations, because she has returned to the individualism of the lower animals and primitive man, reacting among the nations as the individual robber and the individual murderer reacts within the nation. Therefore, she awakens a protective reaction in other nations. Other nations must deal with her as a nation as they deal with individual robbers and murderers.

This individualistic German reaction interferes with the progress of the human race just as the robber and the murderer interfere with local progress within the State. The individual is punished so that his neighbor may live. Unfit Germany must be punished so that the human race may live; that, through altruism, it may maintain and increase its fitness to occupy the earth.

Now that Germany has put its State philosophy in the crucible, she finds that the world is against her. The nations are opposed to Germany for the same reason that the individuals of a community are opposed to a robber and a murderer. Germany is attempting to impose upon the world by force an altruism, for herself alone, based on force, against an altruism, for the entire human race, of modern religion based on simple justice. These two contradictory principles are contending for survival. If Germany achieves her aim—that is, if Germany conquers the world—then Germany's philosophy of force will be imposed upon the world. The men, the women, and the children of the world will then be governed by the State philosophy that one nation should prosper by the labor of the people of another nation; they will be governed by the belief that this State, highly adapted to conquer others by force, should exercise that force to the advantage of themselves alone. They are the wolf—we the sheep.

If the German philosophy should prevail, and, after the world was deluged in blood, broken, and impoverished, we should awake to find ourselves a part of such a State, what would happen?

First, there would be no alien peoples, hence there would be no States left to plunder. Germany's Kultur would then be obliged to earn its own living. Her State philosophy would then meet its first fallacy.

Again, when Germany has imposed her will upon the world, when she has achieved her super-Armageddon, when she has crushed to earth all opposition, then she will find herself without foes, without rivals. Without dangerous rivals the people of the State do not give up their will to the State. A military autocracy can be achieved only in the face of danger. Should Germany conquer all her enemies, she no less completely conquers the source of her own autocratic power. She would then be in the position of a cancer that had killed the body on which it fed. In what state, then, would the world find itself? To what previous cycle of history would this correspond? Force is not the source of State power that can endure; it is raised only to fall.

Even if Germany conquers the world by force, then she will not yet have proved her philosophy to be right, for the complete control of the individual by the State is made possible only by the presence of powerful neighbors or by neighbors who are feared by all the people of a State. In order to secure safety the individual gives himself to the State. It is only a normally weaker State that fears its neighbors; therefore, a Kultur such as the German Kultur can arise only in a State weaker in resources and in numbers of inhabitants than its rivals. The lesser State then strives for its permanent safety by destroying and by conquering its neighbor. When attached by the highly organized State, the larger but inefficiently organized State is then subjected to the same stimulus to development. The unorganized people then become stronger. The Kultur State can grow no stronger; hence, sooner or later, there will tend to be a balance of power established in favor of the larger State.

We must conclude, therefore, that the German philosophers have been reasoning from false premises. This conclusion is supported not only by the tenets of religion and biology, but by history and by an examination of the sources of national strength—the fitness of other nations. History tells us that attempts to rule by force as against justice have always failed, either by awakening the self-protective reactions in many contemporary powerful nations, or when a people have been brutalized into submission by the degeneration of both the conqueror and the conquered. It will follow that whether the German State wins or loses this war, it stands to lose ultimately.

The ephemeral success of State power based on the supreme right of the State contrasted with the lasting success of moral power based on the rights of the individual, as exemplified by the long reign of religions and of moral codes, is one of the outstanding facts of history. The greatest source of power is that which comes spontaneously and justly from the individual; that which requires a minimum of State power in order to mobilize it. The least source of power is that which is compelled by the State, because from the power of the individual must be subtracted the effort of the State to extract that power. The net result, therefore, is less under coercion than under voluntary performance.

Viewed in this light, one may readily understand why the State philosophy of Germany has failed as a colonizer, and why, with their opposing individualistic philosophy, the liberal powers succeed as colonizers. Formal submission may be compelled, but the seeds of discord grow in the damp shade of hate.

A short cycle of success with maximum unhappiness may be achieved by a State through the exercise of sheer force. The longer cycles of success with the maximum of happiness have been and probably will be secured by a State through the philosophy of the individual as expressed by religion and by moral codes. If the Allies fail in the history of today they will succeed in the history of tomorrow. If Germany succeeds in the history of today, Germany will fail in the history of tomorrow. Rather than to share the common fate of passing through the stunting cycle of disintegration following a present German success, it were better that we all now perish gloriously on the battlefield.

In spite of the fallacy of the German philosophers, they have, nevertheless, established in the German people action patterns of such surpassing strength that in the organized intelligence of the German people is our greatest menace. In fact, the present war is a contest of ideas rather than of men. In its broadest sense, it is the practical application of physics, chemistry, and biology in a mass struggle for the existence of nations.

The battle itself is the applied science of killing; survival is the result of knowledge supplied by a nation. Therefore it would appear that those who plan methods of destruction through the use of physical and chemical forces will profit by the viewpoint of those who have special knowledge of the effects of those forces on man and other animals, viz., men with an expert working knowledge of physics, chemistry, and biology.

Research and medicine and biology should not be limited to saving and repairing the wreckage, but should be directed also toward the methods of killing the enemy. To accomplish these ends a cohesion of scientific talents is essential. So long has Germany commandeered the talents of her universities and the intellect of her nation that the menace of Germany is giving the best intellects of her nation every facility and a forced draft to produce ideas.

If we expect to win we must meet discovery with discovery; we must meet loss with greater sacrifice; we must concentrate our business talent, our engineering talent, our medical talent, all our talents, on our battle line. Our universities and our laboratories must become our first line of trenches. Our universities should constitute the foundation of our national defense—our schools, the exponents of our creed of liberty.

Voluntary Draft of England's Women

It Is Hard to Find Any Who Are Not Helping to Win the War, Says Lady Chetwynd—How New York Is Different

FLAGS fly in a profusion never seen in time of peace; soldiers in increasing number give the streets a martial air; determination to defeat Germany at whatever cost is on the lips of almost every one—yet almost without exception the first comment of a visitor from England or France is:

"It is hard to believe from the appearance of New York that there is a war."

What are the striking differences between the look of London and Paris and of New York that form the basis for this comment? Lady Chetwynd of London, formerly Miss Rosalind Secor of New York, just arrived in this country, answers this question.

"The contrast that struck me first," she said, "was the luxury of life in New York, as compared with the extreme simplicity of London. What we have come to recognize as signs of war in England are not yet noticeable in New York. I see men at work in many positions which in England are now practically filled with women, in order that men may be released to serve as soldiers or in work which women cannot undertake. How would it strike New Yorkers to see women servants in men's clubs in order that the number of the men at the front may be increased? Yet that is what has taken place in London.

"Men conductors in the subway seems strange to me, coming direct from England. Long ago women took up this work in London. In transportation women as drivers have taken the place of men in nearly every class of work except as locomotive engineers.

"America has heard what women are doing in the rural districts and in the munition factories. But neither America nor any other country, outside of England itself, realizes what the women of that country are doing to win the war. To me it is the most wonderful expression of the war, and it is characteristic of it that no one who goes to England now could fail to notice at once. The women of Great Britain have been truly mobilized for war; as completely and practically as if they were under conscription. The force of opinion among them, that each should do her part side by side with the men, has been as compelling, one might say, as a legal requirement would have been. It is a spirit so strong that one who hesitates because of inconvenience or love of comfort finds herself drawn into service willy-nilly because of the stand women in general have taken on the subject.

Lady Chetwynd, Formerly Miss Rosalind Secor of New York, Thinks American Women Will Prove More Adaptable to War Work Than Any Others.

"It is beautiful to see how quietly the women have gone about it. No boasting, no unnecessary appeals to busy men for advice, no self-seeking for notoriety by leaders; just the simple concentrated desire to help all they can. In their grief, too, women have shown the same noble spirit of self-effacement. It is the custom not to wear black for the loss of a loved one, that no private display of grief may weaken in the slightest the national endeavor.

"So, too, women have overcome any tendency to hysteria because of the terrifying Zeppelin raids on London in the night. They have come to face the risk as a matter of course. But it is something that is trying on the nerves, nevertheless. Imagine how a woman would feel in New York if every night she went to bed not knowing whether a bomb would descend on the house; one fell within a short distance of my house in Hyde Park.

"There is, first, the signal whistle for all to clear to safety. Next the telephones are shut off, so that the girls employed at the exchanges may seek shelter. You can hear the throbbing of the engines in the air; then our guns going off, trying to bring the monsters down; then the broken shell pieces falling on the roof. It is an experience which one who has not been through it cannot conceive.

"Of all the work that the women of England are doing, the bravest of all, I think, is the work in the ammunition factories. They do this at no small risk. They must take all pieces of metal out of their clothes, even to hairpins, in order to lessen the danger of explosions. Their uniform consists of overalls and a cap. It is something to ask a woman to work at making shells for the killing of men, but they have overlooked that because of the great principle at stake.

"This, then, strikes me as the great difference between the appearance of war preparations in this country and those of Great Britain—you have not yet begun to realize the importance of saving man power by summoning women to every possible employment. I know the women here will respond when called upon, for I consider American women the most adaptable in the world, and certainly they have shown how loyal and helpful their spirit is in what they have already accomplished in aiding in the work.

"The beautiful dresses I see here, the opera, the candy on display in the shops, all these seem of a different world from that of London.

"My first night in New York made me realize more sharply how far I was from London—when all the lights were turned on, so gorgeous but so different from London. When evening comes there it is like primitive night."

Lady Chetwynd has been active in women's war relief in England. Soon after the beginning of the war she appeared on the stage in a play given to raise money for charity.

An International Anthem—Britain and America

Tune: "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and "God Save the King"

I.

TWO Empires by the Sea,
Two Nations great and free
One Anthem raise.
One race of ancient fame,
One tongue, one faith we claim,
One God, whose glorious name
We love and praise.

II.

What deeds our fathers wrought,
What battles we have fought,
Let Fame record.
Now vengeful passion cease,
Come victories of Peace,
Nor Hate nor Pride's caprice
Unsheath the sword.

III.

Though deep the sea and wide,
'Twixt realm and realm its tide
Binds strand to strand.
So be the gulf between
Gray coasts and islands green
With bonds of Peace serene
And Friendship spann'd.

IV.

Now, may the God above
Guard the dear lands we love,
Both East and West.
Let love more fervent glow,
As peaceful ages go,
And strength yet stronger grow,
Blessing the blest.

THE words of the International Anthem were written by Charles Huntington and were first sung to music composed by Mrs. Hattie Lambert Wallenstein at a dinner given by the American Peace and Arbitration League in honor of President Taft, at Sherry's, Feb. 22, 1913. Mrs. Wallenstein dedicated her music to Andrew Carnegie.

Soon after the great war began in 1914 the anthem was heard in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, to the tune of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and "God Save the King." Unlike those two songs, it has no chorus.

Major Gen. J. F. Bell, commanding the national army cantonment at Camp Upton, L. I., called attention to the anthem in a letter published in THE NEW YORK TIMES last Monday morning. He recommended the singing of the song at public gatherings as a means of encouraging the cordial relations between the United States and Great Britain.

Gene Field's Joke That Has Been Untold All These Years

A POET'S jokes live after him, his poems are buried with him in the grave—might be said of the way Denver keeps the memory of Eugene Field. Not that the city where Field lived and wrote for a newspaper in the days before fame came to him is lacking in appreciation of his verse. But, primarily, it is as a man with a genius for chastening practical jokes that Denver cherishes the name of Field.

At this kind of joking Field was a master, able to lay out a plot broad enough to have the whole city for a background and sometimes with a good part of the city assembled to behold the roaring climax. A practical joke of this type was Field's "Patent Fire Extinguisher," here told, it is believed, for the first time. Fred P. Johnson, publisher of The Denver Daily Stockman-Record, who was a reporter in Denver when Field lived there, is the narrator.

"I have forgotten the man's name," said Mr. Johnson, "but he introduced himself to Denver as the Colonel Something-or-Other, and we shortened it at once to 'The Colonel.' He was a very tall man of inflated dignity, with a long flowing mustache, and from the outset he tempted Denver by wearing a shiny silk hat. His idea of conversation was making a speech; he was full of large, unusual words. He had a patent fire extinguisher for sale, something in a bottle he threw on the fire and which he said would extinguish the flames. In making the rounds of the newspapers he met Field, who at once became deeply interested in the fire extinguisher proposition. The Colonel spoke proudly the next day of the interest Mr. Field was taking in him. He said he was going to give a public demonstration of the fire extinguisher, and Mr. Field was so impressed with the importance of the exhibition to the future of Denver that he had offered to assist.

"The Colonel had a large supply of his fire extinguishers stored in the basement of the old Windsor Hotel. He needed some one to do the heavy work in getting ready for the demonstration, and naturally turned to his new friend, Field. Gene provided the helper in the person of an old darky named Uncle Sam.

"At length the night of the demonstration arrived. It was held uptown, and a large crowd was present. Field had seen to that. He had kindly given the Colonel a writeup in advance. The Colonel was surely in his element; minute by minute you could see him swell with pride as the crowd increased. There was a pile of dry-goods boxes and empty barrels in the middle of the lot where the show was pitched. Near by stood the faithful attendant, Uncle Sam, with a bunch of the far-famed hand-grenade fire extinguishers. Field was there, too, ominously solemn looking.

"The Colonel started ceremonies by making a speech. In grandiose fashion he told what the fire extinguishers would do. 'But you need not rely on my words,' he wound up, 'nor on the guarantee that accompanies each and every bottle. You are here as citizens of Denver to see for yourselves. Watch me extinguish flames right before your eyes.

"'Sam,' he said with extreme pomposity, 'put this torch to yon pile of wooden débris.'

"Sam lighted the dry-goods boxes. The flame kindled quickly.

"A few moments later, when the flame was of good size, the Colonel addressed the crowd again:

"'Now, gentlemen,' he said, 'watch how quickly I extinguish these flames.'

"Then he grasped one of the grenades from the extended hands of Uncle Sam and threw it into the fire. There was a tingling crash of splintering glass and—whoof!—the flames leaped 20 feet into the air. For an instant the Colonel stood stricken with amazement. He grabbed another grenade from Uncle Sam and dashed it into the fire. With a roar as of a small conflagration a sheet of flame sprang higher than before. By this time the crowd was laughing and jeering.

"Wildly the Colonel cast still another grenade into the fire. Worse than before. It looked like it would be necessary to call out the Fire Department. 'There is some mistake,' cried the Colonel, and snatched a bottle from the darky. He drew out the cork and took a sniff.

"'Coal oil!' he shouted. 'I have been betrayed!'

"The Colonel, the bombast all wilted out of him, finally got hold of some genuine bottles, but it was too late to make a dent on that fire. Field, going to the rescue, closed the meeting with a few remarks appropriate to the occasion, something like this:

"'Fellow-citizens,' he said, 'I am sure some one has taken advantage of my good friend, the Colonel. Evidently some practical joker has surreptitiously placed petroleum in his fire-extinguisher bottles in the place of the genuine liquid. I still have every confidence in the merit of his preparation and take the privilege of announcing that tomorrow night another demonstration will be given, and I will see myself that no one tampers with the bottles. Come one, come all.'

"'You won't lose anything by this,' said Field, turning to the Colonel. 'The crowd will be larger than ever tomorrow.'

"Sure enough the crowd was bigger the next night and very much edified, for the Colonel made good with his demonstration, but noticeably disappointed, for Field kept his word and 'saw that no one tampered with the bottles.' It was characteristic of Field that he aided the Colonel in unloading fire extinguishers on good citizens of Denver. Probably some of those bottles are around here yet."

War's Subtle Changes in New York Life

By RICHARD BARRY.

THE war has not meant great outward changes in the superficial ways of New York. Business is going on as usual. Social life is curtailed only in a measure. The theatres are bidding loudly for attention. The newspapers have not reduced their size. The bread lines are no longer than in former years at this time. No other metropolis—London, Paris, Berlin, Petrograd, Vienna, Rome—is so little affected.

But there are subtle changes.

For one thing, the débutantes are not "coming out" this year. In other years the open season for débutantes began with the falling of the leaves. Fashionable social life expressed its lyric genius in a cumulative series of events designed to reveal feminine Spring in its most ardent mood. Not in 1917. For where are the boys of yesteryear? In the trenches—or going there.

For another thing, eating has followed drinking as one of the pastimes no longer in vogue. People began by not serving cocktails and they have ended up by cutting out desserts and having only one vegetable. It is yet most doubtful if the working people or the middle class of the city are going in for rigid food curtailment, but nothing pleases the rich so much—the smart rich—as the fad for economy. No longer are the tables of the wealthy a fair field for an impecunious and personable young man enamored of the casual invitation out. One such requested recently to a luncheon at a fashionable home discovered the meal to consist of an inch-square piece of anchovied toast, a sprig of lettuce, and half a boiled egg with a thin sauce. In former years he would have had at least five hearty courses. In Horse Show week of 1917 he was obliged to excuse himself prematurely and seek a saloon, where for 10 cents he got a plate of beans. To have called attention to his hunger would have been unpatriotic, as well as rude, and he felt, as it was, that his clandestine indulgence on a side street was in some measure an act of treason, if not lèse hospitality.

And the knitting! What a field for exploration! There must and will be a literature on the subject. Already two handbooks are out and a work of fiction promised. This extraordinary popular activity has seized the feminine half of the community with a democratic disregard of classes. The servant and the mistress are alike obsessed; it has overflowed the homes, is in the streets and offices, swarming through the hotels and the buses and taxicabs, into the theatres and the churches alike. Any afternoon you can see well-dressed girls sauntering up Fifth Avenue knitting, knitting. The scherzo of this sublime symphony of wartime endeavor occurred on the opening night of the opera, when scores of matrons arrived with their knitting to listen to Caruso and Muzio and Amato.

There are women who refuse to buy new gowns, but specialize in expensive knitting bags. Shops which cannot sell other materials elaborate their knitting bag and knitting silk counters, and from dawn to dark these places are packed. One woman who ordinarily buys a suit every Fall for about $150, this year made her last year's suit do, on the score of war economy, and then bought a knitting bag elaborately embroidered by hand for $175. Out of this, in the course of the Winter, she will be able to produce, through patriotic and industrious devotion, probably three pairs of socks worth 50 cents apiece and a boy's sweater that might be purchased better made for $5.75. Or, deducting the contribution to the "boys over there" of $7.25, the net to the embroidered knitting bag trust is $167.75.

But, of course, the knitters with common sense, who don't waste their money, are in the majority.

Just how much the shops are hit would be hard to say. They all keep a stiff upper lip. "Doing very well, thank you," is the invariable reply to inquiries about the state of business. But it requires no uncannily keen observer to note that window shopping is a greater craze than ever this season.

The men have a better alibi than the women for not buying. They, too, indulge in window shopping and a bit of counter prospecting, but they can usually evade the final clincher of the salesman with, "I'll not buy until I see how I come out on the next draft." The salesman is obliged to smile politely, though he may confront a gray-head with fallen arches, ten inches excess girth, bad eyesight, and false teeth.

As a general thing, it is the middle class that is hardest hit. It is only natural that the well to do set the pace in curbing show. They force or persuade their help to eat less; they keep their jewels in the safety deposit vaults; instead of half a dozen new gowns they have but one. It is fashionable to eliminate liquor, cut down on meat, and otherwise observe the canonical law. It is easier this year for the Pittsburgher or Chicagoan to break into the grand tier of the opera on opening nights. The Horse Show can exist only as an auxiliary to the Red Cross. The foreign-built limousines, so exclusive that only a few are built in any one season, are paroled in custody of the Government. Many of the town mansions that formerly housed families of two are closed, and the inmates have abandoned themselves to apartments of ten rooms and only a few baths.

While it may be assumed that most labor is patriotic, the war has afforded an opportunity for high-handedness to that part of labor which is selfish and tyrannical. Wages mount and mount and mount. The fellow we knew as "Jim," who came at our call on a long-established and never-questioned scale of pay, is now "Mr. James." We politely wait his convenience and ask him what is the least he will take. Strikes are in many cases no longer necessary. Merely to hint at one is as good as a 10 per cent. raise. And if the master's table is cut down, the servants' hall won't stand for it. A lady who ordered fishcakes for Tuesday was startled by Biddy's defiance, "Ain't fish on Friday enough? No working person is going to stand for fish twice a week."

But the middle class! Wages are being raised plentifully, but who has heard of a general raise of salaries? The man who used to get $4 a day is now getting $6.50, but the man who used to keep books at $25 a week is still getting the same $25. Wartime conditions are such that even a generous employer does not feel justified in increasing his payroll unless it becomes obligatory.

In the professions the almost-arrived and the would-bes are as badly off as the has-beens and the never-weres. The struggling lawyer can't pay his rent. The beginning doctor has plenty of work, but bad collections, and France looks good to him. The often-but-not-always actor is studying the rules of the quickest union. The nearly author has dropped his club and is asking how he can get into the war. The collector on his rounds talks less of courts and bailiffs and more of partial payments of the most fractional order.

Of course, luxuries are the first to go. There will be only half as many greenhouses on Long Island this Winter as last; the materialists who control our economies declare that flowers form the first line of defense—and must be the first to fall. Candy suffers, too, but not like flowers, for candy is the camouflage of food and the alterative of alcohol.

Ruskin declares that war is the mother of great art. If so, our American art must be little, for it is hard hit. The sales in some lines, like etching, have all but ceased. This is only in its commercial aspect, while Ruskin spoke of the technical and the spiritual. Time may prove again the truth of his observation. Meanwhile, the talent thriving on illustration, on liberal purchases, on inland exhibitions is being nipped in the bud or thrown into the alley to die—or thrive hardily despite the frost.

The effect on the theatres is curious. All ordinary attractions fall almost instantly. In one week seven stars folded their tents on Broadway. Plays that might have prospered in some other season have no chance this year. A few plays and big musical spectacles are breaking all records. Now that the lights of the Great White Way are lessened, this division will be doubtless heightened; greater success for the successes, greater failure for the failures.

In fine, the major effect of the war, if we must search for one phrase to express everything, is that it has intensified our life. And in almost every direction—in food, in clothing, in work, in thrift, in amusement, in aspiration, in determination. It has cured many trifling vicious habits, and some of the dissipated it has hurled into deeper dissipation. The all-night supper clubs were never so prosperous; the rise in the price of liquor has trebled the intake of a few bars, the most expensive bars, while a quarter of the corner saloons are contemplating going out of business.

Another subtle phase of the war's effect is this: It has undoubtedly intensified the racial lines in this city, at the same time that it has been harmonizing them into an American whole. It has revivified the Italians and quickened a loyalty to their native land. The New York French never were so French before. The New York Spanish for the first time stand out as an integral factor in our communal life. The Germans, though mostly loyal in all outward manner to their adopted country, and in no sense showing allegiance to the Kaiser or his Government, have in many instances become more alert to the Teutonic racial influences than they were before the war. The circulation of German newspapers has not decreased, it is said. German theatres are thriving and German societies, though expressing patriotic purposes, and that evidently sincerely, are increasing.

We see the outward manifestation of these undercurrents on every side. A Spanish play is one of the sensational hits of the day. A French company of actors has arrived, to find a new theatre and a new house waiting for them and a wider and more fashionable public than existed for French plays before, which is saying a great deal. In the Fifth Avenue shops English antiques are the vogue.

The war has done it. The war has cleansed, heightened, exalted the streams from other soils, and they are washing through ours with multiplied power, not to carry us away, not to disintegrate us, but to accentuate the fact that the American is the component of all, the audience for all, the jury for all, the customer for all, and the alleviator of all.

A GRAVE IN FRANCE

By Nora Moore

I CANNOT bring you flowers, for always round your grave
The guns unceasing rave;
But, oh, Beloved and Best,
Upon the Cross of wood that marks the place you died
My heart is crucified,
And watches o'er your rest.
I cannot bring you flowers.

Stormy Career of the Holy City of Jerusalem

Objective of the British Advance Through Palestine Has Suffered Many Sieges and Obeyed Many Masters

By CHARLES JOHNSTON.

AS soon as General Allenby's forces had captured Jaffa and outflanked Jerusalem, taking possession of the railroad leading to the ancient city through the hills from the Mediterranean, it became apparent that n further advance along the coast would compel the retreat of the Turkish Army, or the remnant of it, without further fighting. A still greater movement to the north would mean a Turkish withdrawal to Aleppo, whence the main railroad runs to Bagdad. It was a foregone conclusion that the British Army would soon take Jerusalem, the city around which wars have raged for more than three thousand years.

The best word-picture of the ancient city is Pierre Loti's. He went thither on a pilgrimage from Egypt across the desert, along the same line which has been followed by the English forces. "The sun rises, pale, ominously yellow, a sun of storm, amid threatening clouds," he writes. "Beyond, a large city is gradually revealed, on stony and mournful mountains; through the dust and lashing rain it is not easy to distioguish it. * * * Jerusalem, recognisable from all other towns, with its formidable walls and its little cupola-covered roofs of stone; Jerusalem, gloomy and high, inclosed within its battlements, under a dark sky. * * *"

Pierre Loti has painted with equal beauty the wonderful building which now dominates Jerusalem and, at red sunset, stretches its shadow across the Mount of Olives, the great Mosque of Omar, the "Dome of the Rock," which stands in the midst of the old inclosure of the temple: "The blue mosque becomes more distinct; it seems as if its walls were overspread with variegated jewelry in open work, half pale turquoise and half vivid lapis lazuli, with a little yellow, a little white, a little green, a little black, soberly employed in very fine arabesques."

Almost without a break during thirteen centuries Jerusalem has been in Moslem hands, since the Caliph Omar captured it after a four months' campaign. The Persians, who had taken it in the year 614 of our era, were forced to surrender it fifteen years later to the Emperor Heraclius. Eight years later Omar took it; and, a few years after, the "Dome of the Rock," called the Mosque of Omar, was built in its magnificent beauty by Abd al Malik, "the Slave of the Lord." Godfrey de Bouillon captured the ancient city in 1099, establishing the Latin kingdom of Jerusalem, but in 1187 the chivalrous Saladin recaptured it and rebuilt the ruined walls. Then Richard I. of England essayed to free Jerusalem again, and did indeed come within sight of the historic city, but withdrew without completing his high undertaking. Richard Coeur de Lion did, however, capture the port of Jaffa. He himself describes its capture in a letter dated Oct. 1, 1191:

As we were neating Asruf, Saladin came swooping down upon us. But, of God's mercy, we lost no man of importance, save one. * * * Thence by God's will we came to Jaffa, which we have fortified with ditch and wall. * * * Saladin lost an infinite number of his greatest men; and being put to flight, in the absence of all help and counsel, he has laid waste the whole land of Syria. On the third day before Saladin's defeat we were ourselves wounded with a spear in the left side; but, thanks to God, we have now regained strength. Know also that by twenty days after Christmas we hope, through God's grace, to receive the Holy City of Jerusalem.

But to Richard's demand, Saladin returned a flat refusal: "To us," he wrote to Richard Coeur de Lion, "Jerusalem is as precious, aye, and more precious, than it is to you, in that it was the place whence our Prophet made his journey by night to heaven and is destined to be the gathering place of our nation at the last day. Do not dream that we shall give it up to you."

In June of the following year, King Richard I. of England and his army, "stationed outside Askalon, being now quite ready for the march, issued from Askalon and with early dawn set out for Jerusalem. * * * Now, when the Turks who dwelt in Jerusalem heard from the fugitives that King Richard was approaching, they were terribly afraid, so much so that, had the King at that moment advanced in full force, the Turks would assuredly have forsaken Jerusalem. * * * Even Saladin had called for his best horse, so that he might flee from the face of King Richard, whose coming he dared not await."

But King Richard, taking counsel of discretion, determined otherwise. "The circuit of Jerusalem," he said, "so far as we hear, is very large and, if our little host were to attempt to close it in on every side, our numbers would not suffice for the siege and the protection of those who bring up our stores." Therefore, he withdrew his forces and, after some delay caused by a severe illness, returned to Europe, where he was betrayed by a spy and imprisoned in Austria.

What Richard I. had failed to accomplish after much hard fighting was attained a generation later by diplomatic negotiation by Frederick II., who held Jerusalem by treaty for fifteen years, from 1229 to 1244. It is one of the curiosities of history that this most successful Crusader set forth under sentence of excommunication; that, on his arrival at Jerusalem, this ecclesiastical condemnation against him laid the city under interdict, so that he was compelled to crown himself King of Jerusalem, since no ecclesiastic could perform the ceremony. But as soon as he returned to Italy the sentence was removed and the greatness of his deed was recognized.

After 1244 Jerusalem was under the rule of the Sultans of Egypt until the year 1517, when Selim I. conquered both Palestine and Egypt, taking the title of Caliph, and carrying off the sacred banner of the Moslems to Constantinople. Selim's son, Suleiman the Magnificent, once more built the great walls about Jerusalem. These walls of Suleiman are the present fortifications of the city.

But the great walls of Suleiman the Magnificent are only the last of a long series of walls which, time after time, have been built only to be destroyed. The most tragical destruction not only of the walls, but also of the whole city, was that which was carried out by the Roman armies of Titus, in the year 70 of our era, in the reign of the Emperor Vespasian.

Josephus thus describes the final capture of the city:

And now the earthworks were finished, and the Romans brought up their engines; and some of the seditious, already despairing of saving the city, retired from the wall; others hid themselves in the underground passages, though many stood their ground and defended themselves against those that brought up the battering rams. But the Romans overcame them by their numbers and strength, and, what was the principal thing of all, by going cheerfully about their work, while the Jews were already quite dejected and worn out. Now, as soon as part of the wall was battered down, and some of the towers yielded to the impression of the battering rams, those that manned the wall fled. * * * Thus did the Romans, when they had taken such great pains about weaker walls, get by good fortune what they could never have got by their engines; for three of the towers were too strong for any siege engines. * * *

The Romans, being now masters of the walls, placed their standards upon the towers, and made joyful acclamations for the victory they had gained. * * * Rushing into the streets of the city with their swords drawn, they slew those whom they met without mercy, and set fire to the houses into which the Jews had fled, and burned every soul in them. * * * They ran every one through whom they met, and blocked up the streets with dead bodies, and made the whole city run with blood, to such a degree, indeed, that the fire of many of the burning houses was quenched with these men's blood. And they left off slaying at evening, but the fire greatly prevailed in the night. And the day, when it dawned, found all Jerusalem burning.

The city, thus tragically destroyed, was rebuilt by the Emperor Hadrian, but a revolt in the year 132, under Bar-Cochebas, brought the might of the Romans against it, and it was again destroyed. Then Jerusalem became a Roman colony, and a temple of Jupiter Capitolinus was built on the site of the Temple, where the Mosque of Omar now stands. With the rise of the Eastern Empire at Constantinople the fortunes of Jerusalem also rose; in the year 460 the Empress Eudoxia rebuilt the walls, and a later Byzantine Emperor built a shrine on the Temple inclosure. But, in the year 614, Jerusalem was captured by Chosroes, King of Persia, and it soon passed into Moslem hands.

In the period which lay behind its capture by Titus, Jerusalem had passed through a long series of tragic wars, and been overtaken by the greatest misfortunes since the epoch of the Captivities. After those great devastations by Eastern tyrants and conquerors Jerusalem was caught in the vortex of Greek and Roman wars. Alexander the Great, conquering Palestine and Egypt, spared the historic City of Jerusalem, but its walls were razed in the year 320 before our era by one of Alexander's Generals, Ptolemy I., to whom Egypt fell at Alexander's death. The walls, rebuilt by Simon a century later, were again destroyed, this time by Antiochus Epiphanes, successor of another of Alexander's Generals. Rebuilt three years later by the heroic Judas Maccabaeus, the walls were once more thrown down by the Greeks, to be rebuilt by Jonathan. Herod the Great made Jerusalem a rich and powerful capital, but the Roman General Pompey besieged the Temple hill in the year 65 before our era and again destroyed the walls. Restored by Herod Antipater, they were again destroyed by the Romans, who stormed the city in the year 37.

So we pass backward, through so many wars and devastations, to the period of the Captivities. In the first, about the year 588 before our era, the King of the Chaldees took Jerusalem and "slew their young men with the sword in the house of their sanctuary, and had no compassion upon young man or maiden, old man or him that stooped for age. * * * And they burnt the house of God, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem, and burnt all the palaces thereof with fire, and destroyed all the goodly vessels thereof. And them that had escaped from the sword, carried he away to Babylon." The days of weeping by the waters of Babylon were followed by days of rejoicing when, under Cyrus, King of Persia, the decree went forth that the walls of Jerusalem should be built up once more.

The city thus rebuilt had grown by accretions since the time, 500 years before, when David captured it—then it was merely a hill fort of the Canaanites—strengthened its fortifications, and made it the new capital of his kingdom. He built the first palace and temple, of hewn logs only, to give place to the great structures of stone set up by Solomon. Many temples, many shrines, have succeeded each other on the same foundations, including a temple of Jupiter and the Moslem Mosque of Omar, but none of them vies in enduring fame with the great Temple of King Solomon.

How It Feels When German Airmen Make a Raid Over London

I WAS sitting in a theatre a little more than a week ago, when the barking of the guns began like the baying of dogs when thieves are at the gate," writes E. Temple Thurston, an Englishman in describing an air raid on London. "The place was crowded, and through the house you could feel that shudder of expectancy pass through every mind, like ripples on a still and peaceful pond when a stone is suddenly flung into the placid water. Had there been a pulsometer attached to every wrist, the swaying finger would have swung round in that moment marking a high pulse rate. Every one was thinking the same sort of thing: 'What is going to happen next? Where are they now?' Upon every mind there fell that weighted sense of foreboding and presentiment as when a thunderstorm is in the air and sooner or later must burst.

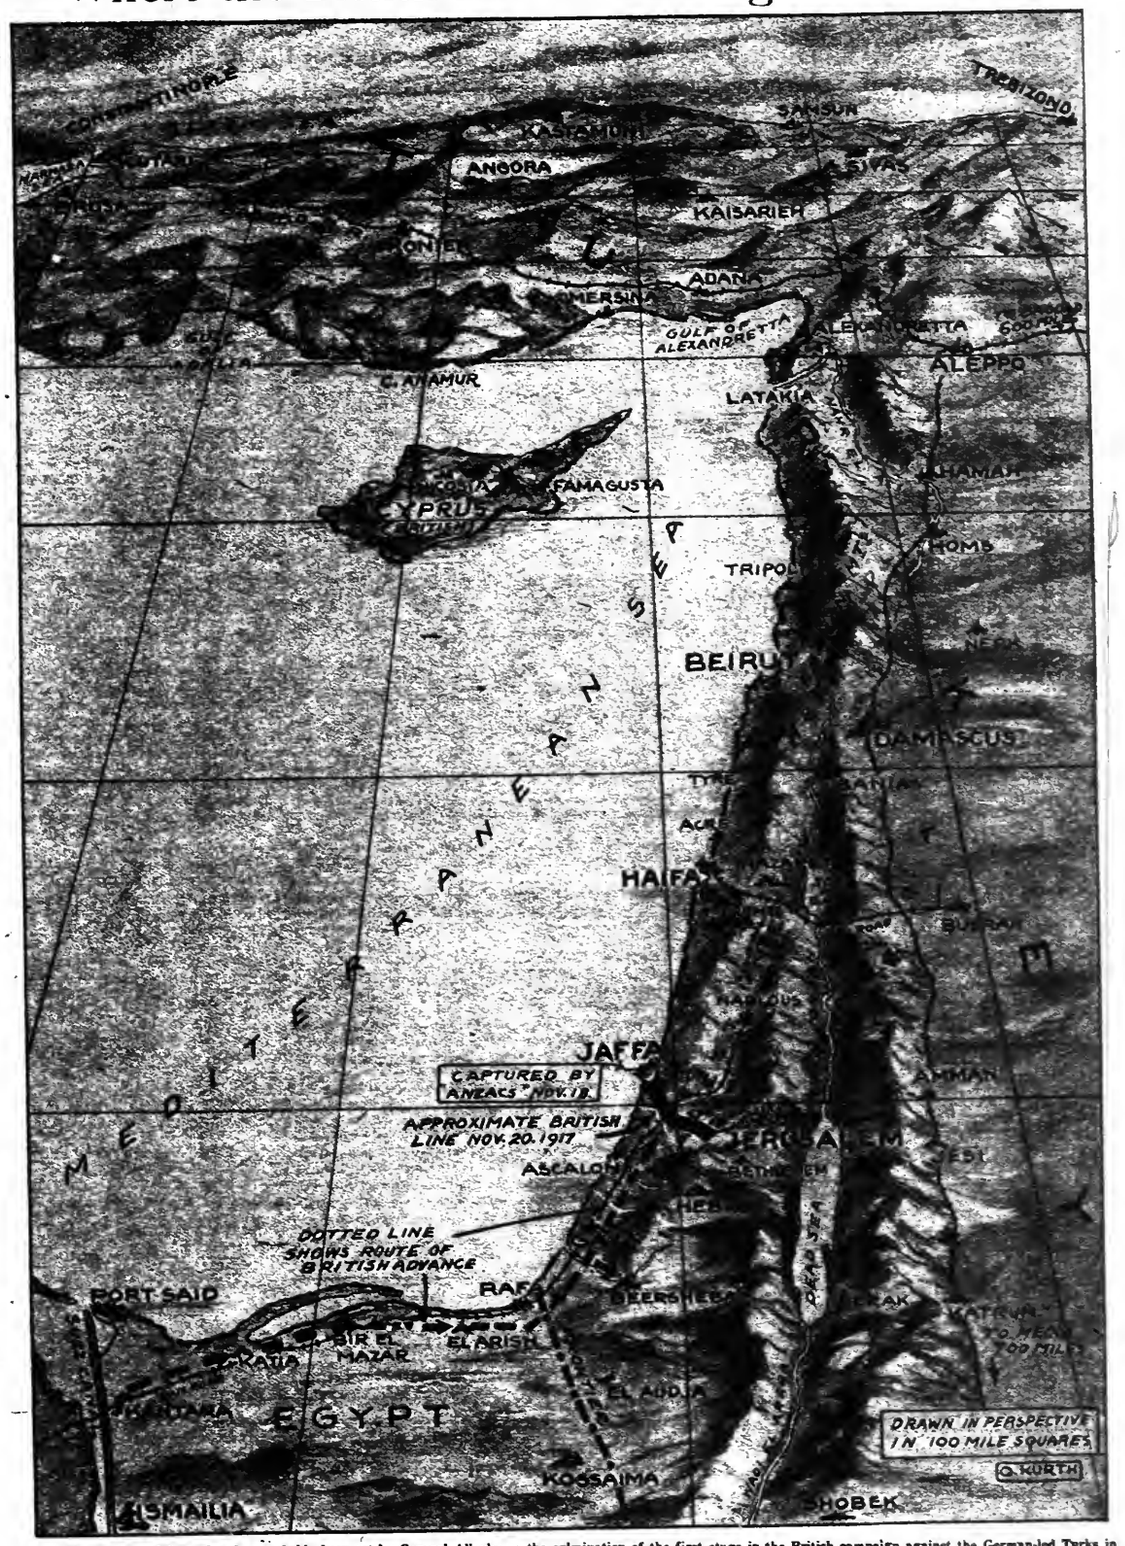
"There is no avoiding that sensation. The most nerveless must have some glimmering of what I mean. For an instant it catches the breath in the throat; as with a jack-boot, it kicks the heart into sudden tumult, and then there settles down upon one's senses the feeling that some ponderous weight is pressing one down, boxing one in, and nothing can be done but sit and wait until it is passed. There is a fatal inevitability about it.

"In those moments one feels no more incensed with the German aviators than in a thunderstorm one feels angry with God. There they are in the sky above one's head, and on they must fly, dropping their bombs as they go until they are out of range of you. You cannot be annoyed with anything so inevitable as that. It is only afterward, when the strain is passed, when in cold blood and with a steady pulse, that one sees the damage which has been done or reads of the lives that have been taken, that one's gorge rises at the thought of that Higher Command in Germany deliberately designing this warfare against noncombatant people and gaining courage for their brutality in the proclamation to the world that they themselves should be immune.

"These were the sensations of almost every one that night, as I sat in the theatre and the distant boom of the falling bombs grew nearer and nearer as the increasing tattoo of the anti-aircraft guns heralded their approach. Like a wave it went, rippling, incredibly swift, up to the very walls.

"About twenty people got up from their seats in the upper parts of the house under the roof—about twenty out of some thousands—that was all. And on the stage a girl was singing a love-ditty. I looked at her, expecting some instant's pause, some movement, however brief, in which one could trace that tremor of sensation in her. It came. But it was not in the voice; it was not in her face, or in any impulsive gesture that she made. She just raised her eyes to that part of the house where those twenty people had risen from their seats, and as plain as words—plainer, indeed, than those which she was singing—her eyes said, 'Aliens,' and she went on with her song."

Where the British Are Advancing in Palestine



The capture of Jerusalem has probably been set by General Allenby as the culmination of the first stage in the British campaign against the German-led Turks in Palestine. This first stage may be said to be the protection of the Suez Canal against possible attack by means of aggressive offensive instead of passive defensive operations. In accordance with such a plan, Allenby's forces took Gaza, Beersheba, Askalon, and Jaffa in rapid succession, and soon placed Jerusalem in danger of a siege. By advancing along the shores of the Mediterranean he kept within close reach of his communications by sea.

The second stage of the campaign will probably be an advance along the coast toward Aleppo. Capture of this place, where the railway from Jerusalem joins the line from Constantinople to Bagdad, (the famous Berlin-Bagdad Railway,) will seriously threaten Turkish forces operating to the southeastward against the British.

Nonresistance and Anarchy Closely Allied

An Arraignment of the Selfishness and Immorality of the Pacifists Attitude When Their Country Calls for Help

By J. G. PHELPS STOKES

THE man or woman who sees a human being in serious trouble and who, being able to help, does nothing, is evidently a pretty poor sort of man or woman. The man or woman who sees the life of another endangered, and who for purely selfish reasons withholds such help as he or she is well able to give, is a good deal of a cad; while he or she who should look with unconcern upon the torture or plundering of another, taking the position that the sufferings of another need particularly concern none but the sufferer, would evidently be despicable.

He who is unwilling to help a member of his family or a neighbor in distress is a pretty poor sort of a person to have in a family, or a pretty poor sort of a neighbor; and similarly the nation or the people that is unwilling to help another nation or another people that calls for help in an unparalleled crisis scarce merits a position of respect in the family of nations.

The member of a trade union who is unwilling to bear his share of the common burden involved in protecting and promoting the interests of his union is usually rightly looked upon with contempt, and the man or woman who is unwilling to assume his fair share, or to have his nation assume its fair share, of the burden of protecting such liberties as mankind has painfully achieved, wherever they are threatened, is entitled to little respect from his fellow-men, or even from himself.

The nation that prefers to stand by itself alone enjoying such peace, tranquility, and prosperity as can be enjoyed in the midst of a world at war, preferring ease and safety outside the struggle rather than to share in the common task of checking wholesale violators of rights and liberties common and essential to all, has slight claim to the respect of any one. Such a nation would properly be looked upon with contempt by those who are enduring every hardship and even offering their lives that a great common cause may live and prosper.

It is alleged by some that if all would fold their hands and bend their necks when tyranny is threatened, some providential force would intervene to check the impending blow and the threatened devastation, and yet those who urge this are unable to find in history any instance in which such superhuman force has intervened to save the lives and liberties of a people threatened with destruction who were unwilling to help themselves. Perhaps it is true that under some circumstances life of some other kind than physical is saved or ennobled by nonresistance to evil. Perhaps under some circumstances the individual is justified in sacrificing himself or herself through nonresistance, if the welfare of no other is at stake. But the case is very different where the welfare of others is vitally concerned. It is very base to stand nonresistingly by while vast numbers of helpless humans are being sacrificed to the ruthlessness of others, if, being able to help, one does nothing. It may be doubted whether the desired personal salvation is ever earned by nonresistants who, seeking salvation for themselves, abandon others to destruction.

In the midst of a world at war, the nonresistant attitude may be the most selfish and immoral imaginable. In those rare cases where self-sacrifice without resistance brings spiritual gain to the individual nonresister, he should consider whether his personal gain is not purchased at too great a price if in, and by, paying it he afford freedom to a tyrant group to devastate and destroy the lives of countless thousands who through such destruction are deprived of all opportunity for further growth in body or in spirit themselves. Whatever may be said as to the morality or immorality of nonresistance to wrong done to one's self, the case is far different where one knowingly and deliberately permits grievous wrong to be done to others. One may perhaps permit wrong to be done to one's self for the benefit of another, but one surely has not the right to permit wrong to be done to others for the benefit of one's self or for the sake of any satisfaction one may derive from refusing, as a nonresistant, to help protect and save one's neighbor.

From the earliest days of this Republic the obligation of universal service, in emergencies, has been rightly incumbent upon all who are physically capable of serving. Every able-bodied man between 18 and 45 has always been subject to the President's call to defend the liberties of the nation. Every able-bodied citizen has always been subject to the call of the Sheriff of his county to join the posse comitatus and do his share, under arms, to preserve internal peace. Every citizen of our great cities has always been under obligation to respond to the call of any police officer for aid in a sudden emergency. The whole tendency of the democratic movement of the times is to broaden the range of the citizen's duty, and to require that each shall serve the State who would be served by it in turn. "There are no rights," said Mazzini, "without their corresponding duties." No man has a right to the physical protection of the State who will not render reciprocal physical protection to the State that physically protects him, and no man or woman has a right to participate as a citizen in the law-making power of a nation or of a community of nations who is unwilling to help enforce the laws that he or she helps to make.

J. G. Phelps Stokes, Once a Socialist, But No Pacifist.

Of course, there are nonresistants who say they are quite willing to serve the State, but that they must be permitted to serve in ways of their own choosing. This is essentially the anarchistic contention which denies the obligation of the individual to submit to being governed by the will of another or by any group, great or small. Such nonresistants should frankly class themselves as anarchists, and cease to profess allegiance to the ideals of democracy.

Then there are those who admit theoretically the propriety of majority rule, but allege that Governments such as ours often fail to represent the will of the majority, and that unless the individual nonresistant believes the Government to be accurately responsive to the popular will, in a given instance, he or she may disregard its decrees. The difference between this position and that of the anarchist is not easy to define; but even if we were to admit (which I shall not do) that individual anarchist or a group has the "right" to disregard the will of those who support a democratic Government, it is at least as true that those who support the Government have a no less right to disregard the will of the individual anarchist or his group.

In either case the disregarding is at the peril of him who disregards; but where the supporters of a Government believe that they would fare a still greater peril by yielding to the will of an anarchistic faction, their refusal to yield is logical; and it is hardly less obvious that for a democratic Government to permit its purposes to be frustrated by an anti-Governmental faction would be a betrayal of the trust imposed upon it by those who support it in power. Those who place a Government in power may not be a majority of the entire population, but until the majority of the people create a form of government more to their liking, they will have to either support the imperfect type they now have, while seeking in lawful ways to improve it, or by disregarding its decrees plunge the community into anarchistic chaos. He is not a good citizen who seeks ease and comfort for himself at the cost of the public welfare.

The citizen has no rights but such as are consistent with the democratic interests of the community. Sometimes the public need takes precedence over the rights of the individual, and the latter are rightly subordinated to the former. Thus, by the right of "eminent domain" the community takes possession, at need, of any and all of the property of a citizen, and of all that citizen's rights to enter upon or use that property for any purpose whatever. The right to exercise freedom of speech, even, upon one's own property, ceases the moment competent authority declares that the public interest requires exclusive control of that property for public purposes by lawfully constituted authorities. In a great public emergency no man's right to freedom of speech, even, or to liberty of any kind, can be permitted by society to have precedence over the public need of self-protection. No gift is greater than the giver. The people who for common benefit give guarantee of liberty to all, may and should modify that guarantee in so far as those are concerned who would use it adversely to the common welfare.

It remains to be determined what constitutes use adverse to the common welfare. Here the opinion of the majority, as expressed by their representatives in Governmental assemblies, must, in democratic communities, be taken as the best expression of the public will that can be obtained under the conditions at the time prevailing; and until conditions become so changed that a better method of sensing the popular will can be availed of, it is obligatory upon all who wish the privileges of citizenship to yield to the popular will as declared by the duly constituted Governmental bodies, and to exercise more than ordinary care that in their attempts to modify the existing popular will, and, pending such desired modification of it, they do not obstruct the fulfilment of its orderly decrees.

Those who attempt by whatever means to thwart the fulfillment of the public will, as declared by lawful public assemblies, do so at their peril. Persons who in a democracy seek to thwart in an emergency the will of a Government maintained in power by the will of the majority have but themselves to blame if they be regarded by that majority as public enemies, and if measures appropriate for use against enemies are brought to bear against them. The paramount duty of a citizen is to serve the community to which he owes much of his life and all of his liberty. And where the expressed will of that community differs from his own he should either subordinate his own will, while seeking in lawful ways to bring the will of the community into closer accord with his own, or else should leave that community and seek another more to his liking.

Complete individual liberty is impossible where minds and tempers differ, for the desires of one will inevitably run counter to the desires of another. Those who wish liberty to have always their own way in their relations with the community in which they dwell, wish anarchy. Those who, on the other hand, firmly believe that a condition of anarchy would be less conducive to human happiness, as men are now constituted, than a condition where men yield to the expressed will of the majority, will combat anarchy by all lawful means within their power. He who will not serve the community as the community wants to be served has no just ground for complaint if the community refuses to serve him quite as he wants to be served. He who will serve the community only in ways of his own choosing has no just cause for complaint if the community says in return that it will serve him only in ways of its own choosing.

There are persons calling themselves internationalists who say that, if their native land and its liberties were attacked, they would join in its defense, even to the point of using arms to prevent the triumph of an invader, but they rebel at the suggestion that they should aid similarly in the protection and deliverance of another land and of another people. Their alleged internationalism contemplates sharing the blessings but none of the serious burdens that friendly international relations entail. The true internationalist, on the other hand, hearing a cry for help, whether from Mesopotamia or from Belgium or from a threatened world, stands erect in his manhood, or in her womanhood, and says, "Here I am, send me!"

It is obvious that all cannot be sent abroad, since many are needed at home; but the true internationalist does not insist upon choosing his own field of service. On the contrary, he realizes that great human emergencies require highly co-ordinated efforts for their effective control, and that efficient leadership is essential, and that, the best available leadership having been obtained, each true internationalist should offer to serve wherever needed most, in another land as readily as in his own, and should leave the designation of the place and the assignment of the task to those whose supreme task it is to co-ordinate effectively the labors of all.

In a supreme crisis so vast as that which now confronts the American people together with the rest of the world, every American and every internationalist worthy of the name in America should place his services at the disposal of the President, the ablest and wisest leader of the whole people available at the present time, for service under him, either at home or abroad, whenever asked to go.

New Version of Archduke Rudolph's Murder

Fatal Shot Fired by Girl's Relative to Whom She Was Betrothed, Says Son of Francis Joseph's Chamberlain

WAS the Archduchess Stéphanie indirectly responsible for the death of her husband, the Archduke Rudolph, heir to the Austrian throne, in the hunting lodge of Meyerling? And were the shots that killed the Archduke and Marie Vecsera fired by the girl's relative, to whom she was betrothed? Did the Emperor Francis Joseph betray his brother Maximilian in Mexico?

These are the questions raised and answered in the affirmative, by Count Roger de Rességuier, whose father was Francis Joseph's Court Chamberlain. The answers are based, it is asserted, on family records and memoirs. Herbert Vivian, who is a Knight of the Royal Order of Tokovo and an officer of the Royal Order of Danilo, has just written a book drawn from Count Roger's memoirs, under the title of "Francis Joseph and His Court," (John Lane Company,) and in it new details of the Hapsburg Court life are set forth. While Count de Rességuier refers to records as a basis for some of his assertions or quotes from the recollections of relations and friends, now and again he lets fall a mere suspicion to be left unanswered in the reader's mind.

Count de Rességuier pays scant heed to certain legends that weave a veil of extenuating romance over the character of Francis Joseph's son. Rudolph did have liberal views, he admits, agreeing thus far with the Archduke's apologists; he was even something of a rebel; he was undoubtedly tinged with some taint of potential madness from the mother's side of the house as well as from the long-recurring insanity of the Hapsburgs, but, the author goes on, for all that could be said in his favor he was by no means an admirable character. Francis Joseph, as the Count de Rességuier presents him, was a libertine himself, but his son was worse.

The Count asserts that two of the people who always knew the truth about Rudolph's death were his mother's friends, Countess Anastasia Wimpffen—at whose house the Crown Prince and the young Baroness Vecsera used to meet—and Countess Chorinsky-Mittrowsky. He says:

I can remember many long evenings when we discussed the tragedy of Meyerling at Modling, near Vienna, in a shooting box belonging to the Sovereign Prince of Liechtenstein. That is to say, they discussed it among themselves, for I was little more than a boy. Besides my mother, Countess Chorinsky-Mittrowsky and her husband, the Lord Chief Justice, were there; also an Italian nobleman, Count Ceschi di Santa Croce, Grand Prior of the Order of Malta. During those evenings, listening to the talk of those who had known the very souls of the dramatis personæ, all the secrets behind the scenes, and all sorts of details discovered by the secret police, I lived the whole tragedy over again, and I understood why the public could never penetrate its mysteries, for the lips of those who knew were sealed.

But now, after so many years there is no reason for continuing to hide what really happened, even though the new light may cast much responsibility upon a woman who can still plead many extenuating circumstances, namely, the greatness of the offense which had been put upon her; perhaps, too, a failure to foresee the tragic consequences of her revenge. I allude to the lady who is now only Countess Lonyay and ought to have been Empress of Austria, Stéphanie, the widow of the Archduke. * * *

Stéphanie, daughter of Leopold, King of the Belgians, was very young when she married Archduke Rudolph of Austria. * * * It was a very unhappy marriage. Even the Emperor, though he had secretly desired the match, did not look upon her with favor, and the Empress Elisabeth always treated her very coldly. She also suffered a good deal on account of the matrimonial misadventures of her sister Louise, the wife of Philip of Coburg, her husband's most constant associate in debauch. Above all, there was the terrible infidelity of Rudolph. One can understand how the Archduchess must have locked up in her heart whole storehouses of hate. Then there were low intriguers always trying to take advantage of her discontents, and they induced her to shoot an arrow that traveled much further than she had ever anticipated. That she certainly regretted.

The Archduke had many love affairs before his relations with Marie Vecsera became notorious. But this one, according to the latest explanation, was more than the Archduchess could bear. The Count de Rességuier asserts that Marie was the daughter of a Greek Princess, who had been the mistress of Francis Joseph many years before, and that when the Princess left the Court a husband was found for her in the person of a Baron of questionable title, whom the Emperor established in wealth and "nobility." There was always a suspicion in some quarters, says the Count, that Marie Vecsera was Francis Joseph's child. "But," he comments, "we need not complicate a drama that is already sad enough." At all events, he says, the man who was hastily summoned to become Marie's affianced husband when the Archduchess Stéphanie had set detectives on the girl's trail, was either her uncle or her cousin—the Count de Rességuier does not remember which—and it was he, the narrator flatly affirms, who killed Marie and the heir to the Austrian throne. Of Stéphanie's part the author, continuing, says:

Archduchess Stéphanie, for reasons already mentioned, was like a cloud charged with electricity, ready at any moment to launch her thunderbolt. The infidelity had been too patent; it was in everybody's mouth, and it shook her out of her usual attitude of proud contempt. Miserable agents volunteered their services, and gradually increased their ascendency over her mind. Among them was a man called Schaeffer, manager of the Argus Detective Agency. * * * Francis Joseph and his uncompromising partisans were more angry about this affair than they had been about any of the past follies of the Archduke. * * * Marie's mother sought an audience of the old Emperor. * * * It was now that her brother, or cousin, Baron Baldazzi, appeared on the scenes and was betrothed to the wayward girl. But he was not the man one might have thought. He soon proved to be rather the guardian of the family honor than the convenient bridegroom. He installed the reign of terror.

But none of these events could alarm Archduke Rudolph. * * * And one fine day the Archduke, who had quite made up his mind not to be bullied, set out for his shooting box at Meyerling in the neighboring Wienerwald. He did not go alone or secretly, but set out in his usual landau. * * * Marie Vecsera was with him. Other carriages followed with the usual boon companions of his shooting and other expeditions; his cousin, Philip of Coburg, Count Hoyos, two stalwart Alpenjaeger and many good bottles of champagne. * * * The Archduke's carriages were seen on their way through Modling and Gaaden.

Meanwhile a conference was going on between the Archduchess Stéphanie and Schaeffer at Vienna, and this was immediately followed by another conference between Schaeffer and Baldazzi and Marie's mother. It is difficult to reconstruct their conversation. There was certainly no mandate for murder on the part of either Stéphenie or Marie's mother. There was probably an incitement to provoke a scandal or even to use threats. But Baron Baldazzi exceeded any such instructions by a very long way. He took a Remington rifle, perhaps under pretense of a shooting expedition, and set out in the afternoon by the Sudbahn Railway to Baden. There he took a carriage and drove up the Helenenthal, the other valley leading to Meyerling. But he sent back the carriage before he reached Meyerling. Then he took to the woods, where he was seen by two monks from Heiligenkreuz. Night was closing in.

From a pine tree just outside the shooting lodge, the Count continues, Baldazzi could look directly into a large lighted room on the first floor. What he saw was the group of people who had come from Vienna all asleep, while the candles burned low in their sockets and Philip and Count Hoyos, and the two huntsmen, were, the Count adds, intoxicated; empty champagne bottles lay on the floor. The narrator continues his story:

Then Baldazzi fired without the least hurry or excitement. He fired at his betrothed and at the heir to the Austrian throne. He was a crack shot, and he struck both through the heart. Then he was seized with mad fury. He threw away his gun, which was afterward found by the servants of the Abbey, climbed down into the ditch, swung himself up to the low window whose panes had been broken, entered the room, seized an empty bottle, and battered the heads of the two dead lovers. Bits of glass were afterward found right inside their brains. Very early the same morning, Count Hoyos and Philip of Coburg hurried off to Vienna to announce the death of the Archduke.

That is the true story of the tragedy of Meyerling.

Emperor Francis Joseph as a Boy.

One earlier chronicler says the young Baroness was the one flower of loveliness and serenity that bloomed in the darkness and sadness of the Archduke's life, that she was devoted to him, and that for him she sacrificed her reputation, her position, and at last her life. According to other versions, the young Baroness Vecsera was an adventuress; she constantly played upon the lower side of Rudolph's complex nature, led him into dissipations and despairs, and made him a victim of drugs. Upon the question of Marie's character the Count de Rességuier passes no judgment at all; he frankly says that he does not know whether she was good or bad, innocent or scheming. He describes her as very young, "a child, but by no means an ordinary child," that she had ambitions, and that, although she has been reputed beautiful, she was "short and rather stumpy, but she had a white skin and pretty, sad, black eyes."

In seeking to show that Francis Joseph betrayed Maximilian, the Count de Rességuier starts out with the assertion that the older brother had always hated the younger, and recalls his mother's memory of a Court "function" where the two boys, aged fourteen and sixteen, came publicly to blows; that Maximilian was making things very uncomfortable for the older Archduke when the two were separated, and Francis Joseph's jealousy was not mitigated when, upon many disagreeable occasions, their mother took Maximilian's part. Of the Mexican affair, the Count writes:

The unfortunate Maximilian was betrayed by his brother Francis Joseph and by Francis Joseph's partisans. I should not make such a statement if I were not possessed of proofs which fill all my youthful memories. My mother, Countess Erminin of Strachwitz, was lady in waiting at that time. She received a personal invitation from Maximilian and Carlotta, then starting for Mexico, to take over the supreme charge of the Court of the new empire. Though she refused, she was associated with many of the events I am now about to relate. My father, Count Hadrian de Rességuier, one of the Emperor's chamberlains, owned the great estate and castle of Nisko, between the Tatra Mountains and the San; among his guests there were Father Fischer, Archbishop of Mexico, and Prince Iturbide of the Incas, Maximilian's adopted son. But it was my uncle, Count Oliver de Rességuier, now First Chamberlain of Galicia, who acted as Francis Joseph's chief instrument in that black business. At one time my family could talk of nothing else.

Maximilian succeeded Radetzki as Viceroy of Lombardy. He was set over the Hungarians as Governor General. However, he displayed too much indulgence toward the Italians; he was too much liked by the Hungarians—so at least his opponents murmured at Vienna. And, it seems to me, at the back of the honors conferred on him there lurked already the accusation that, making common cause with Italians and Hungarians, he was meditating high treason against his brother, the Emperor.

It was not only his brother who distrusted him. At Vienna all the conservatism of the old rulers who had been despoiled by Napoleon formed a sort of intrenched camp against Archduke Maximilian. So he, who had made a love-match with the beautiful Princess Charlotte of Belgium, withdrew himself far away from all the hatred in the Castle of Miramar, a white Norman dream among the red rocks of the Adriatic. But he did not remain there long. While Charlotte rambled in the gardens, while he read romances in the aquarium, the Mexican intrigue was being prepared, the intrigue which was to bring death to him and madness to his wife.

My uncle, Count Oliver de Rességuier, returning from a colloquy with Francis Joseph, from whom he had asked leave to retain his commission in the Austrian Navy while he went as Chamberlain to Mexico, met a friend who also wanted to go out with the new Emperor. "I have no family and have made my will," my uncle said to him, "but I should not advise any one who has anything to lose to go where I am going." And he knew what he was talking about, for he was an instrument of the Court of Vienna in that dark tragedy. Thus there was much talk at that time about the departure. And those who knew must must have recognized it as a sure preliminary to those Austro-French arrangements which culminated later on in the first meeting of the two Emperors at Salzburg. With reference to that meeting, Countess d'Harmoncourt has related a serious incident.

"Your Majesty," Francis Joseph said, "your Majesty, I need all your troops in Europe." To which Napoleon III. replied coldly, "To the detriment of your Majesty's brother."

For Maximilian's last support in that unfortunate year 1867 lay in the French troops commanded by the treacherous Marshal Bazaine. The pretext then for withdrawing the troops was political necessity. The real motive was the Emperor's implacable hatred of his brother.

But the treachery which Count Roger alleges went further than that. By advice of Count Oliver de Rességuier, he says, the Empress Carlotta returned to Europe. At least, his explanation is they wanted to save her. An agent of Francis Joseph, who possessed the technical knowledge of a naval officer, sought out Juarez and gave him the plans of the Fortress of Querétaro, says the narrator, in arguing for his point that Maximilian was betrayed into his enemy's hands.

This is the story the Chamberlain's son tells of what he calls "the foul deed which the public has not yet discovered, which has long been known in Austria only to the many who dare not tell." But this is not the only piece of Hapsburg Court intrigue to which the Count gives attention. He relates, for instance, the tale of Louise of Coburg, wife of the notorious Philip and sister of the unhappy Stéphanie, who was shut up in a madhouse, and adds that the intimacy of the old King Leopold of the Belgians with Baroness Vaughan was deliberately incited and built up by agents of Vienna, in order to rob the two Belgian Princesses of the large fortunes which they would otherwise receive from their father and thus to keep them helpless under Hapsburg rule. He refers again and again to the money-getting proclivities of the Hapsburgs, and for the late Francis Joseph he has scarcely a word that is good. The whole family he sums up at the end of a chapter in which he traces the essential likeness between the stern and religious Franz Ferdinand and his gay and dissolute brother Otho. "That race," he says, "is a mad and sanguinary anachronism."

Rodin Leaves Pupil to Continue in His Steps

Ivan Mestrovic, Young Serbian Sculptor, Is Authoritative Leader of New School of Sculpture

RODIN is dead, but not before he had time to say to his age what he felt and knew of modeling. Modeling was his passion and his triumph, and in his wisdom as an artist he soppressed as far as possible edges and lines in his sculpture in favor of floating veils of tone with a rich complexity of planes that created an atmosphere for his forms as tender as the chiaroscuro of Carrière and as profound as that of Rembrandt. In this way he gained movement of light on the surfaces of his sculptures. The direction of his outlines also are eloquent of movement, even where they are the crisp unmodulated outlines of some of his drawings, and where he did modulate the outline of a form it quivers with life as though it were actually breathing and pulsing humanity. This is Rodin's greatest gift to his time, the sense of movement throughout his work, a sense of movement accentuated often by the contrast of modeled planes and contours with rough immgbile blocks of stone from which the living forms are released by the sculptor's chisel. It is a deeply poetic art into which has been put a lifetime of knowledge and emotion and ceaseless work. It has given birth to a large school of followers and imitators, but already the tide has somewhat turned from it and toward an art in which one of Rodin's pupils is the young authoritative leader.

Ivan Mestrovic, whose portrait study of Rodin is reproduced on this page, has created an art of massive forms and large surfaces on which the light is content to lie quietly instead of rippling like gentle laughter over innumerable faintly indicated bosses and depressions. He suggests a primitive savagery of feeling in his men and women of heavy and sombre features, which apparently are modeled by the incessant attack of the elements rather than by a sculptor's initiated hand. There is a certain appropriateness to the immediate moment in this. Mestrovic speaks to an emotional generation, to a generation that already has suffered the tragedy of war and looks toward further suffering. He comes from a people who are strong and heroic and whose strength and heroism have met the fiercest test of the age. It is only this heroic spirit that especially points to the Serbian origin of the sculptor. He has been influenced by many ancient traditions, by Assyrian and Egyptian art, and by the art of the early Greeks and, to a slight degree, by the work of his teacher, Rodin. In fusing these influences he has arrived at a richly personal expression of his racial feeling. He has written of his aim: "Feeling within me all the destiny of my race, and perceiving that thereby I should be able to find the best material for my art, which felt a spontaneous impulse to express itself in its own tongue, I set to work at this task." The specific task to which he refers is the great temple to be erected on the plains of Kosovo.

Portrait of Rodin by Ivan Mestrovic, the Serbian Sculptor, Once Rodin's Pupil.

Mestrovic was born in 1883 in Dalmatia of peasant parents who belonged to the southern Slavs. As a boy he tended sheep and carved the wooden spindles of the peasants, acquiring the beginnings of a wood carver's technique, which he has not forgotten in his later work. When he found a patron and went to study art in cities he began with Vienna and then went to Paris, taking something of the Austrian secession for his Kosovo monument and something of French modernism for his portraits. The underlying power of the work lies, however, in his personal contribution, an intensity of consciousness that made him feel that his art was derived from the folksongs he heard blind beggars sing in his boyhood.

Mestrovic exhibited in England as long ago as 1906, in Venice in 1907, in Paris in 1909, in the Vienna Secession in 1910, in Rome in 1911, and a representative exhibition of his work was held at the Victoria and Albert Museum, London, in 1915. A similar exhibition was to have been held in this country last year, but it was abandoned on account of the danger and difficulty of transporting the sculpture across the ocean. The sculptor is now in France as a refugee.

"Loiterer" Ferrets Out New York's Charms

City of Yesterday and Today Ransacked for Historical and Artistic Tidbits by a Cheerful Urban Explorer

NEW YORKERS like to think of themselves as always in a dreadful hurry, rushing about from place to place in a hectic fever, concerned with the present and the future, utterly unable to dally with the past. For this reason most of them have only the most casual sort of acquaintance with the city they live in. Wall Street by day—Forty-second Street by night—what more knowledge of the metropolis can you ask? These New Yorkers know, in a hazy way, that the Dutch settled Manhattan; that the English got it away from them; that the city is full of historic spots which—had the poor harassed creatures only the time!—they would visit and waggle their heads over, duly impressed. But under existing conditions you must understand that they simply cannot do it.

Well, to such New Yorkers is recommended the perusal of a book just published, where the choice tidbits of old New York's history are compactly collected so that he who runs may read without robbing his mad life of more than an hour or two. It is called "A Loiterer in New York." (George H. Doran Company,) and is by Helen W. Henderson. She knows New York, she likes it, and she writes about it gayly yet understandingly, dwelling on its past, yet truly sympathetic to its present, so that the energetic business man who considers it his duty to delve into New York's early days won't feel that the city of his feverish daily pursuits has been insulted.

Miss Henderson's pages give a reader the impression of one casually wandering about New York, without set purpose, without that deadly efficiency of method which invests some works of this ilk with all the terror of schoolbooks. Those who follow her will pick up a large amount of knowledge about New York City without running the risk of belonging to that awful class called "authorities" with which subjects of all kinds are supposed to be infested.

For instance, the reader, trustingly following his pleasant guide, is taken by the hand, so to speak, into Bowling Green, which he has favored, doubtless scores of times, with an unseeing, preoccupied eye, and is transported to a Bowling Green of years ago, where stood the equestrian statue of King George III., which the English masters of the city set up there and the Americans hauled down and melted into bullets. And lest the skyscrapers surrounding the little park make you feel skeptical that any such thing could possibly have happened there, the author instructs you to look at the fence surrounding the green, where you may still see the signs left by the anti-George mob, which broke off the iron balls surmounting the fence posts and threw them into the melting pot along with the statue.

Then you are taken into the new Custom House, where yesterday is forgotten in a cheery description of the brand-new paintings on the walls and the statues by living sculptors fringing the great building. And then—lest today in turn get its grip on you—the author whisks you back to the past by reminding you that the north side of the Battery—the Battery, mind you, with the elevated running through it!—used to be the fashionable quarter of New York. If you don't believe it, go look at the house still standing at 7 State Street, hedged about with towering structures full of steamship offices and banks and things. That house still has the handsome pillared front that distinguished it when it was the residence of Moses Rogers, a New York merchant, who built it in 1805, when nobody dreamed of a New York extending even as far north as Fourteenth Street. And, of course, before the reader leaves the Battery he must needs remember that Castle Garden was built in the War of 1812 as a defense against possible British attack—you can still see the embrasures for its thirty guns—and that, after it had shed its warlike character, Jenny Lind sang there before 5,000 enraptured New Yorkers.

Then comes Trinity Church, which, as Miss Henderson happily puts it, is now so girt by skyscrapers that "where she formerly dominated she now sits enshrined." The reader is reminded—mayhap, told for the first time if he is a typical New Yorker—that the church possesses a splendid communion service of silver presented by Queen Anne 200 years ago; that there is a legend that its pulpit is made from wood taken from the frigate Constitution; that it is the richest church society in America, owning the propery on which a large part of New York's lower west side is built, which was originally known as the "Church Farm" and came to Trinity, like its silver service, as a gift from Queen Anne.

We are told, too, that St. Paul's, lying just above Trinity, in another hollow between towering buildings, is the only church in the city that has been preserved intact from the days before the American Revolution. When its cornerstone was laid in 1764 the district about the corner of Broadway and Fulton Street was a wheat field, and members of Trinity parish, to which St. Paul's belonged then, as it does now, shook their heads doubtfully over the advisability of building a chapel "so far out of town." Among other treasures St. Paul's possesses, in the bust of John Wells, a prominent lawyer of bygone New York days; the first marble portrait made by a native American. The sculptor was one John Frazee, who plied his trade almost 100 years ago.

Roundabout St. Paul's there are many places of historical note, which the New Yorker never even favors with a thought as he hustles past to his daily work. In the quadrilateral bounded by Maiden Lane, Pearl Street, Fulton Street, and Broadway lies Golden Hill—nowadays certainly neither golden nor a hill—where was fought, in 1770, the "first battle of the Revolution," between British soldiers and patriots who had erected a Liberty pole which was chopped down by the Englishmen, thus precipitating the battle. The actual site was a courtyard only two minutes' walk from St. Paul's. Close to the battlefield, at the intersection of Gold and Platt Streets, stands the jackknife house, so dubbed because it looks like a gigantic jackknife, Platt Street having been ruthlessly cut through the house as it originally stood; one end is so narrow that the rooms branch from the stairway like shelves.

On John Street, only a few doors east

Master Craftsmen at Art Alliance

Batik Wall Hanging. Adapted from a Persian Miniature, by Mary H. Tannahill. (In Exhibition of Master Craftsmen at Art Alliance Galleries.)

THERE are mocking spirits who, seeing an announcement of the exhibition of master craftsmen in this country, will deny the existence of American master craftsmen. The reason is easy enough to find. The comparatively small amount of excellent work done here in the field of the crafts has not been sufficiently discriminated. Good and bad have been rubbing elbows in a democratic juxtaposition that has played havoc with standards. Moreover, good design and good workmanship have not been united as in the early days of great craftsmanship. Often the best designs shown to the public have been shabbily executed, and where the public has rebelled it has had to satisfy itself with beautiful execution of commonplace designs. The unity of the fine arts and the industrial arts is not yet close at hand, but it is near enough for advance guards of protestation against the division of ideals to make themselves heard. The present exhibition of the master craftsmen of America at the galleries of the Art Alliance of America is such an advance guard.

The first impression of the visitor to the galleries will be of the great variety of the collected objects. Book decoration and binding, iron work, silver, lace, and embroidery, furniture, pottery, jewelry, weavings, leather work, basket work, batik, small sculpture, tiling; these are the general heads under which they may be grouped. Not everything is in the highest class, but nothing is clearly unworthy of association with the exhibition as it was conceived by a few ardent workers possessed of ideals, and as a whole, it stands comparison with similar foreign exhibitions remarkably well. Recalling, for example, the exhibition of the decorative arts of Great Britain in Paris a few years ago, it stands out that while the much smaller American exhibition contains nothing of the supreme distinction of the Philip Webb glass or the William de Morgan ceramics, it has fewer objects to which the mind of the visitor must descend with disconcerting sudden ness.

It is, of course, impossible, with an exhibition including the work of more than 150 exhibitors, to mention the individual objects claiming attention by their merit. It is worth while, however, to emphasize the presence of certain groups of work that place upon the exhibition the stamp of that union of fine execution and fine design which forms its chief excuse for being.

In the department of metal work, for example, the wrought iron of Samuel Yellin lifts the standard of a woefully neglected craft to a level that at least stimulates craftsman and public. The dignity of these exhibits is due largely to the respect for the material shown in their design. The jewelry and metal work of Mrs. Enoch R. Vedder has the same quality, with an added boldness and refinement of invention. It is the kind of jewelry that asks for support by costumes of such material as the Renaissance knew, but this very demand will help the public mind, swinging helplessly between peasant denim and Georgette crêpe, toward a temper covetous of precious fabrics. Among the weavings the Italian note is contributed by the work of the Scuola d'Industrie Italiane which shows more clearly than in former years the firmness of execution achieved in the earlier centuries before the craft had so nearly died out in Italy. Batik work has been adopted as almost a national form of decoration for artistic fabrics in this country. Martha Ryther Tannahill the more conservative turning to ancient models, each showing a feeling for expressive and individual color combination.

In the ceramics the Durant-Rice series in Persian and turquoise blue and the Robineau carved porcelains have a deservedly prominent place. The exquisite work in colored leather and wool by Konrad Scappechi has an opulent beauty of both design and execution quite unequaled in this country. There is bookbinding by Harvey S. Chatfield, enameled silver by Elizabeth E. Copeland, and jewelry by Josephine Shaw, Florence E. Smith, Douglas Donaldson, Lilla Whitcomb, Imogen H. Deming, Lucretia Bush, Grace Hazn, and others. Sarah Comer's glass skill seems an innovation not adequately appreciated. The carved and painted furniture by Floy Hanson is highly individual and delightful. Much represents the newest school of decorative design in this kind and Mary H. must be left to a later notice.

Charles Rosen's Exhibition.

At the Ferargil Galleries is an exhibition of paintings by Charles Rosen, comprising some of the best examples of that artist's work within the last few years. The purity and intensity of his color in such canvases as "Blue River," the originality of his patterning in the enticing canvas, "Trees and Vines," the crispness of his "Snowy Morning," and the lovely blue and sailor white of "Racks and River" are so many evidences of his rich personal feeling and the clarity of his vision.

Posters Are Needed.

The Art War Relief Committee is sending out an appeal to the painters, sculptors, illustrators, and designers of America to submit poster designs of any size and executed in any medium. They should be sent in on Dec. 1 and on Jan. 1 to the Art War Relief Committee, care of the Art Alliance of America, 10 East Forty-seventh Street, New York City. If an artist is inexperienced in poster making, but has a good patriotic idea suitable for the purpose, he is asked to send in a sketch of that idea suitable for development by some other artist. No awards of any kind are offered. The posters required by the Government are to advertise the next Liberty Loan, to make known the various activities and needs of the Red Cross Society, to encourage thrift and economy of food, and to stimulate in each individual a sense of patriotism and responsibility to the country.

of Broadway, stood the John Street Theatre, called the Theatre Royal until the audiences of British officers and New Yorkers owning allegiance to King George gave way to George Washington and free Americans. The visits of Washington, Miss Henderson relates, were very ceremonious occasions; soldiers stood guard at the doors while he was inside the theatre, and the manager, in a full dress of black, with his hair powdered, and holding two wax candles in silver candlesticks, received the President and conducted him and his party to their seats.

Leaving St. Paul's and the cluster of historical spots around it, we are transported a few blocks further north and bidden to consider the City Hall, which, the neglectful New Yorker is reminded, "has been ranked among the three or four finest examples of Colonial architecture extant." Miss Henderson once more calls to the attention of the citizens fortunate enough to possess this beautiful and graceful building that credit for its plan must not go entirely to John McComb, the Scotchman whose name is usually associated with it, but also to his French partner, Joseph Mangin. And, don't forget to go into the City Hall and look up the portrait of Lafayette hanging there; and won't you confess to surprise when you learn that the man who painted it was Samuel F. B. Morse, who invented the telegraph. Come, now, did you ever know that he was a perfectly good artist?

From the City Hall Miss Henderson makes her readers jump to the Bowery. She tells not of "tough guys" and "Suicide Hall" and disreputable "bums," but of the Bowery of pleasant Dutch country seats, when the thoroughfare destined later to become so notorious was a country lane following a meandering course to a remote place known as Harlem. Her readers will probably look with increased respect on the Church of St. Mark's, at Second Avenue and Tenth Street, when they realize that beneath the foundation is buried the doughty Peter Stuyvesant, wooden leg and all. Here lie also the remains of many old-time New York patricians, many of whose family names are still familiar to the New Yorker of today—Peter Goelet, Thomas Barclay, Jacob Lorillard, Nicholas Fish.

Then comes Greenwich Village, on the site of the "Bossen Bouwerie" of Dutch days, which had within its limits numerous beautiful country places, with grounds extending to the shores of the Hudson, and groves of trees clustering about fine old-fashioned houses, where leading citizens of the little city to the south took their ease. Nor does Miss Henderson fail to touch upon the latest manifestation of Greenwich Village—its sudden blossoming forth as New York's Latin Quarter—thus showing again that hers is not a mind concerned only with the past but one alertly alive to the present as well. She paints an amusing picture of the "arty" quarter of Greenwich Village around Washington Square, where "restaurants are hectic, mostly lodged in basements and back yards, fitted with long deal tables, while the service is of the picnic variety; everybody 'digs in and scoops 'round,' without too much dependence on an overworked functionary with socialistic tendencies, who prefers honorable domestic service to aelling his soul in commercial pursuits."

"The proper dinner costome for these resorts," she furthermore informs us, "is something that might be suitable for going eel bobbing in a dory, on a dark, dank night in Summer."

Here, too, is St. John's Chapel, which, seventy years ago, was the centre of a delightful neighborhood, yet now lies, neglected and desolate, surrounded by the broken-down remnants of the houses that once sheltered the city's fashionables.

Of Washington Square the author narrates many interesting things; how it used to be Potter's Field, where the paupers were interred; how Colt invented there the revolver named after him; how it once possessed a young ladies' school where Elihu Root taught the fair misses. And she also narrates how the fiery Hendrick Brevoort, whose ancestral acres covered much of the land now lying north of the square, was so incensed when the City Fathers wished to cut Broadway through his property that he stood armed with a blunderbuss on his threshold, completely overawed the workmen sent to dig the thoroughfare, and caused Broadway to be deflected from the course mapped out for it. You may still see the fruits of Brevoort's belligerent stand in the bend described by the great thoroughfare at Tenth Street.

In rambling, chatty style the author thus conducts her readers ever further uptown—past Grace Church, past Union Square—did you know that the Washington statue there, by Kirk Brown, is one of the best equestrian statues in the world?—past Madison Square and Gramercy Park, over Murray Hill, with its memories of the retreat of the defeated troops of Washington after the battle of Long Island—past Central Park to Harlem and Kingsbridge and Spuyten Duyvil, in old times places far removed from New York City, which, in its youthful days, clung shyly to the vicinity of the Battery, as if afraid to venture far from the protecting guns of that place of warlike name. And all through her pages is the same happy blend of yesterday and today. She discourses as easily about George Washington and Israel Putnam leading their weary soldiers through the byways, which are now the residential streets of Murray Hill, toward the junction of two winding country lanes which are now Broadway and Forty-third Street, as she does of Saint-Gaudens's Farragut in Madison Square, and "The Little Church Around the Corner," familiar to all of us, and the palaces and clubs of upper Fifth Avenue.

Slackers Are Not Popular Among the Quakers

Though Exempt from Fighting, the Friends Are Serving in Many Ways to Win War—Men in Red Cross, Women Knitting

A GOOD Quaker in the United States today is one who, because of his exemption from actual fighting, feels that he is in honor bound to do twice as much for his Government in other ways as he would do were he not exempt. That is the definition of a good Quaker by a Quaker, Robert Cromwell Root, Pacific Coast Director of the American Peace Society. Mr. Root recently arrived in Washington after a trip across country, in the course of which he attended many yearly meetings of the Friends in States of the Middle West. He gave to all of these meetings the above description of what a Quaker should be in wartime, and at each of them the definition was received with approval and enthusiastic response. They also approved another definition, which was that the worst slacker in the country was the Quaker slacker, the citizen who took advantage of the country's willing exemption of him from bearing arms to avoid all other forms of war service.

Mr. Root talked to fifteen or twenty thousand Quakers all told, and they, as delegates to the various meetings, represented about 125,000 more. He found no slackers. He found no group that was not doing its utmost in the way of work or money contributions to serve the country in its war against Germany. At every meeting that he attended there were prayers for the American soldiers in France and for those who are going there. In other words, the attitude of the Quakers of America in this war is that of the American Peace Society, to which most of them belong. They know real peace when they see it because it has been the chief aim of themselves and their ancestors since the days of George Fox. Practically none of this body of non combatants has been lured into the mushroom bogus peace societies or into the German propaganda camouflage peace societies that have sprung up in all parts of the United States in the last three years.

It was in the national headquarters of the American Peace Society at Washington that Mr. Root told the story of his trip across the States in the interest of his country. This is one peace headquarters in America that the ordinary, loyal American citizen may enter with out a guilty sense, as he turns the door knob, that he is doing something either seditious or ridiculous. In the first place, it does not have to explain itself or prove an alibi. As it was organized in 1828 there is no suspicion that it was founded to help the Kaiser. President Wilson has renewed his membership in it since America went into the war. Arthur Deerin Call, the executive director of the society and editor of its publications, has his office liberally decorated with American flags. From his window he can look across the building tops and see the American flag flying from the staff of the War Department, and the sight does not irritate him. In fact, he pointed to the War Department flag the other day when he was asked what the American Peace Society stood fur in the present crisis. "There it is," he replied, "over on that staff, the flag flying from the State, War, and Navy Departments. We stand for all of those departments. We stand for the White House, just this side of them, which you can't see from this window. We stand for all the things that you can see from this window and for all the things you can't see that sympolize the Government of the United States."

And Mr. Root, the Quaker, nodded acquiescence for himself and all his people.

Turning from his window, Mr. Call put the same thing in more concrete form by reading parts of his statement in a recent issue of the society's Advocate of Peace:

"It is not a matter of theory, but a matter of fact that the world has reached a situation where the judicial settlement of international disputes is for the time impracticable. After the Government to which we owe allegiance declared itself in a state of war, the judicial settlement of the disputes between this country and

Robert Cromwell Root, Quaker Leader Who Helps.

Germany became not only impracticable but unthinkable. That we sense this does not mean that our opposition to war is abated. Quite the contrary. We are opposed to the war as President Wilson is opposed to the war. Furthermore, as practical people interested in concrete results, we are supporting the President in overcoming the German Government for the very purpose that the war may be ended.

"It is clearly within the realm of defensible duty that when our country is in danger we should rally to our country's support. Our country is in danger now. The inevitable conclusion, therefore, is, we must rally to the aid of our country now. To embarrass the United States now would be folly, if not treason. The abolition of war is an international job. Our puny, personal quibbles have little to do with the abolition of war. International peace worthy of sensible men is a constructive and scientific international program. Individual and obstructive criticisms, especially at this time, are mostly personal, narrow, emotional and destructive. War is a universal disease. Our sentimental oppositions to this war constitute no remedy for war."

Again the Quaker from California nodded approval.

"They are the opinions," said Mr. Root, "that I found generally prevailing among the Friends throughout the United States. I urged them all to do everything possible to help in all activities for the aid and comfort of the troops, to co-operate with the Government in its food conservation program, to join the Red Cross, to buy Liberty bonds. I found that they were already doing all of these things. Quaker women everywhere are knitting and making bandages for soldiers, collecting books to be sent to the camps, and aiding the Y. M. C. A. in its work among the men in the armies.

"The biggest single effort of the Quaker is, perhaps, the work of the Friends' Service Unit for reconstruction in France. We already have contributed large sums for that and will make it half a million or more. Quakers have already gone to France as the representatives of this unit and are living there at their own expense and working without any compensation whatever in the rebuilding of homes and the restoring of gardens and vineyards. Other Quakers are going soon to join them. Such Friends as Dr. Rufus M. Jones, Professor of Philosophy at Haverford; Isaac Sharpless, Dean of the Haverford Graduate School, and Dr. Walter C. Woodward, Secretary of the Friends Five Years' Meeting, are directing the work of this Service Unit.

"The Quakers of the country have gone into these activities without the slightest hesitation or doubt as to the propriety or consistency of their service. They all seem to feel instinctively that a double obligation is laid upon them to render what service they can in the ways that are not barred to them by their belief. They welcome the opportunity to show that a man who may not bear arms to kill another man can still be loyal and useful to his country. They do not condemn those who are bearing arms. On the contrary, they applaud the soldiers for their courage and they pray for them. They give to the men who can fight conscientiously full credit for honesty of conviction.

"Quakers, in all their meetings, not only pray for our own soldiers but for the cause of the Allies. We have been for the Allies from the beginning of the war in 1914 because the thing that the Allies are fighting to destroy is abhorrent to Quakers. We want the destruction of the German idea.

"Of course, Quakers want peace, but it must be a durable peace. We are not interested in a bogus peace that would soon lead to further war, and we are not deceived by the efforts of the German Government and its agents in this country and elsewhere to bring about a Berlin peace that would leave the Prussian autocracy in control of the fate of Europe and the world.

"We want a peace that will lead to general disarmament and the establishment of a world court, but we know that such a peace would have to be guaranteed on both sides by democracies, not by democracies on one side and by the present German Government on the other. In that respect, the Quakers of the United States are absolutely in accord with President Wilson. As between what Wilson stands for and what La Follette stands for, the Friends are with the President without the slightest question.

"Surprising as it may seem, we Quakers are optimistic right now in the midst of war, for we believe that this war is making for the peace that we stand for. It has demonstrated a great many things to the world that were not sufficiently thought about and appreciated before. It has shown that the old diplomacy, the diplomacy of the honest man who is sent abroad to lie for his country, has utterly failed, and that the world must come to the Golden Rule diplomacy of John Hay. With this awakening to the mistake of the past the people of the world will realize that they must qualify themselves for citizensbip in their several States as they never have done before."

Crimes We Unknowingly Commit Against Our Children

THOUSANDS of loving parents are daily unconsciously using methods in bringing up their children which can easily destroy for life their chance of happiness and success. And the pitiful part of it is that these parents do not realize the irreparable harm they are doing.

Character is not born but builded. You as a parent are the architect of your child's character—the constructor of its future career, for upon character depends success. Abraham Lincoln, perhaps our greatest American, once said: "All that I am and all that I ever hope to be I owe to my mother." Great men before and since Lincoln have said the same thing—and how truly they spoke!

The trouble has always been that we have never given any really scientific study to the question of child training—we have not searched for the cause of disobedience, the cause of wilfulness, the cause of untruthfulness, and of other symptoms which, if not treated in the right way, may lead to dire consequences. Instead, we punish the child for exhibiting the bad trait, or else "let it go." As a result, we do the child an actual wrong instead of helping it. What we should do is to attack the trouble at its source.

The new system of child training is founded upon the principle that confidence is the basis of control. And the five fundamental principles involved are: suggestion, substitution in choice, parental initiative in co-operation, parental expectation and parental approval.

Under this new system children who have been well-nigh unmanageable become obedient and willing, and such traits as bashfulness, jealousy, fear, bragging, etc., are overcome. But the system goes deeper than that, for it instils high ideals and builds character, which is of course the goal of all parents' efforts in child training.

Physical punishment, shouted commands, and other barbarous relics of the old system have no place in this modern school. Children are made comrades, not slaves, are helped, not punished. And the results are nothing short of marvelous.

Instead of a hardship, child training becomes a genuine pleasure, as the parent shares every confidence, every joy and every sorrow of the child, and at the same time has its unqualified respect. This is a situation rarely possible under old training methods.

And what a source of pride now as well as in after years: To have children whose every action shows culture and refinement, perfect little gentlemen and gentlewomen, yet full of childish enthusiasm and spontaneity with all!

To put in practice these new ideas in child training, strange as it may seem, takes less time than the old method. It is simply a question of applying principles founded on a scientific study of human nature, going at it in such a way as to get immediate results without friction.

The founder of this new system is Professor Ray C. Beery, A.B., M.A., (Harvard and Columbia), who has written a complete Course in Practical Child Training. This Course is based on Professor Beery's extensive investigations and wide practical experience, and provides a well-worked-out plan which the parent can easily follow. The Parents Association, a national organization devoted to improving the methods of child training, has adopted the Beery system and is teaching the course to its members by mail.

An Invitation to Join

At this time an invitation is being extended to earnest fathers and mothers who would like to join the Association and learn the methods which are proving so universally successful with children of all ages from babyhood to man and womanhood.

Membership in the Parents Association—which has no dues—entitles you to a complete course of lessons in child training by Professor Beery, in four handsome volumes of approximately 275 pages each. This course of lessons must not be confused with the hundreds of books on child training which leave the reader in the dark because of vagueness and lack of definite and practical applications of the principles laid down. It does not deal in glittering generalities. Instead, it shows by concrete illustrations and detailed explanations exactly what to do to meet every emergency and how to accomplish immediate results and make a permanent impression. No matter whether your child is still in the cradle or is eighteen years old, these books will show how to apply the right methods at once. You merely take up the particular trait, turn to the proper page, and apply the lessons to the child. You are told exactly what to do. The younger the child the better. You cannot begin too soon, for the child's behavior in the first few years of life depends on the parent, not on the child.

Membership in the Parents Association gives you, in addition to the special four-volume Course in Practical Child Training, the following privileges:

First: Unlimited free use of the Association's advisory service in the solution of perplexing problems in Child Training.

Second: Mail service which will consist of Special Bulletins to be issued from time to time, containing the newest findings of the Association's Board of Experts, and relating the experiences in child training of other members of the Association, thus keeping each member informed as to the progress being made in this important and far-reaching work.

Third: Authoritative advice as to children's books, schools, camps, and all matters pertaining to educational methods.

Fourth: Unlimited free use of the Association's Purchase Service Bureau, through whom all educational books, whether school text-books, or books treating on the mental, physical, or moral development and training of children, can be purchased. This service will be free and members availing themselves of it will find by comparison of prices that they secure the benefit of publishers' trade discounts.

Free Examination

Before becoming a member of the Parents Association you are privileged to examine the four-volume Course in Practical Child Training without the slightest obligation, and without even making a deposit, in order that you may be sure that the work of the Association is along the lines of which you approve, and that the course contains exactly what you want.

Here is the offer the Association is making for a limited time: If you will fill out and mail the application form printed below, without any money, the Complete Course in Practical Child Training will be sent by return post on five days' approval. Examine it carefully and then, if you feel you can afford to be without it, send it back and you will owe nothing. If, on the other hand, you are as well pleased as the thousands of other fathers and mothers who are turning to it each day for guidance, send only $2 at the end of five days and $2 a month for four months. On receipt of the first payment you will be enrolled as a member of the Association, and will receive a certificate of membership.

If you are truly anxious to make the greatest possible success of your children's lives, you owe it to them to at least look at this course, which you may do, in accordance with this offer, without risking a penny. I must urge you to act promptly, however, as this offer may never be made here again.

Two "Home" Holidays— And How We Have Prepared for Them

¶ Thanksgiving next week.

¶ Christmas in a month.

¶ Both of them essentially holidays that tug at the heartstrings—that draw one, as straight as a homing pigeon, to the family hearth.

¶ In these war-times we should seek to make these holidays even more cheerful than usual for everybody.

¶ But we should mix common sense with ALL of our holiday shopping, do it sensibly, economically, practically—spend wisely what we can afford.

¶ And we should SHOP EARLY—for our own good, for better selection, and for the benefit of the salespeople, who can serve us so much better now than will be possible later.

¶ And for the additional good reason that mail, express and freight are all slower than under normal conditions; and you must allow more time on the way.

STUDIED SIMPLICITY IN NEW GOWNS

Furless Suits Making Their Appearance—Lingerie Blouses Popular—Fur Capes in Abundance—Tendency Toward Individualism in Women's Wear Becoming Noticeable.

At tea in one of the smartest hotels this past week the gowns were quiet and calculated to be inconspicuous, but they certainly were almost elaborate in their studied simplicity. There would suddenly appear a woman in sombre garb, dark in color, plain in line, and apparently minus all trimming. Then, upon examination, would be seen every evidence of unremitting labor and time and art spent upon that one small piece of human covering.

Around the huge tea room they sat—with a man in civilian's garb here and there, a soldier more often—drinking tea and other things with the nonchalant ease and grace with which New York women are so richly endowed. A few of them were knitting between sips; and it must be said for these women of society that when they knit they do it well. There is no sign of dropped stitches and uneven rows. Everything is perfectly accomplished. Of course, they do not knit universally nor with unremitting zeal as the women in the smaller places do, but the supposition is that they are finding more constructive war work to occupy their time—work that has a larger field of operation.

The suits seen at tea time were in many types and styles. The suit with fur trimming was usually the dressy suit—that is, when fur was used at all it was used in lavish quantities. One high-heeled person (high heels on black satin shoes, by the way,) wore a lovely suit of black chiffon velvet. The back of the extremely narrow skirt was draped a little just above its hem and left open for twelve inches or more to give ease in walking and grace in the hanging of the skirt. The peplum of the coat was in general of knee length, being pointed and longer on each side. It was gathered in very full and the bottom edged with a wide band of fox fur. The coat itself was slightly fitted, and the coachman's collar stood so high and straight about the face that one doubted whether there was any face at all. To top all this puffiness and slenderness combined was a tight little turban of black velvet with a thin, bending ostrich feather of bright and shining green, waving straight aloft.

There were many suits without a vestige of fur of any sort—a decided reaction from the earlier indications of the season. These furless suits are made, as yet, in shades of beige and brown and in darkish shades of red and Chinese blue. They are of gloveskin cloth or heavy twill. Their coats are almost basques, so tightly are they fitted, and their peplums are full and flaring and very short—shorter, in fact, at back than at front, where they extend in points toward the knees. The skirts are tight and slim and long, and the peplums perk out above them in the most fascinating manner. This description may be a forerunner of the popular Spring suit to come.

Blouses worn with the suits were a secondary consideration, as they always are, but they were none the less beautiful when they did appear. The slip-on blouse seen was made of white satin and extending over the skirt for a matter of ten inches or more. Women are loath to give up this very becoming style of accomplishing a waist for a suit. This one was made with white chiffon sleeves and rolling collar, and its only trimming was in the nature of two huge motives of Chinese embroidery in shades of dark blue done on the lower edge of the peplum.

Lingerie blouses were everywhere. They seem to grow more lovely as they increase in popularity. Now they are mostly hand-done and French in character, if not really in actual workmanship. One of fine handkerchief linen had a panel at the front and a high turnover collar of real cluny lace, with only a neck bow of narrow black grosgrain ribbon to relieve its pure whiteness.

A hand-made waist of white batiste was finished around its narrow, rolling collar, and around the turned back cuffs and at the closing in front with a roll and an over-and-over stitch of Copenhagen blue cotton—the sort that is often done on the edges of fine handkerchiefs. It was really quite a dainty finish for a simple blouse and gave it a distinct air.

At tea in any of the New York hotels these Winter days there are fur capes in abundance. They are best when made quite short—waist length—and flaring, and more often than not they are caught together in armholes. There is great smartness about these shoulder fixings, and during the sort of weather we have been having they are enough of a wrap to be worn with a one-piece dress. It is really the newest way of dressing. One-piece frocks are so decidedly smart that women hate to think of covering their perfected lines with an all-enveloping coat. In this way they are able to preserve the best of them for the outside world to behold. The capes are made of all manner of short-haired furs—mole, kolinsky, squirrel, beaver—and of sable, when the wearer is fortunate.

Of coat dresses there were a few strictly tailored in character, and they were generally worn with fur scarfs or straight capelets, while often a muff was carried.

There were a few bustles, chiefly on velvet or on wool velours gowns, but they were restricted in numbers, though without exception extremely well made.

Hats were small as a rule. Many of them were made with those soft, shaped to the head crowns that are so becoming to femininity. There were a few turbans made from metal brocades, some tightly fitting hats of fur, and some with fur pom-poms for trimming. Ostrich is quote popular this season and always becoming.

There is more and more talk of the Government restriction on cloth for Spring suits. While the movement has not as yet become pronounced, it is gaining ground every day, and the wholesalers are taking steps to co-operate in every way. Already experiments are being made in cutting suits from three yards of material and even from less. All extra cuffs, collarettes, vests, and trimmings will have to be omitted if this is to be accomplished. Some of the designers are putting forth little notions of making trimmings and touches out of cotton materials—crêpe in pastel shades, for instance. There is great opportunity here for American designs to take a decided step forward. It will be interesting to watch developments as the weeks pass.

In the matter of neck fixings and yokes and vests, there is much of interest to be seen in the shops just now. There are wonderful bits of handwork ready to be attached to any gown. Satin collars with scarf ends, meant to be tied and swung loosely in front, are quite popular, while filet holds its own in a remarkable manner. The new finely-tucked yokes and waistcoats trimmed with rows of real lace are, it is whispered, worn by many women under a suit when there is no remote possibility of having to remove the coat. They help to preserve the fitted lines of a tailored coat with much more of dignity than any blouse could achieve no matter how gossamer its material.

Beige Wool Velours, Braided and Simply Made.

In order to keep slim in the new tightly-fitted coats and skirts and at the same time remain reasonably warm to withstand the Winter winds, there has been put on the market a sort of knitted silk underwear that is so closely woven and of such heavy quality that it is guaranteed to keep out the breezes on the wintriest day, and at the same time cling closely to the figure with never a bulge in any spot. This will be welcome news to the woman who acknowledges a desire to be warm.

It has been hinted that women's newly acquired independence of thought will lead by natural stages to an independence of dressing, and it was interesting to note at a recent dinner where only women were present that there was a decided sprinkling of gowns acknowledging no standard of style, past or present. The gowns were designed as individual creations to suit only the individuals who wore them. In London for a long time there has been a decided movement in this direction. At one of the smartest shops there they have a department devoted solely to making clothes of this character and general type, and it has, the report is, been steadily patronized. There is no doubting the fact that women look rather well in gowns of this sort—gowns that hang from the shoulders and do away with any need for corsets or confining bands of any sort. They look well if one forgets all the surrounding dictates of a made-to-order fashion.

At a dinner at a fashionable restaurant were seen many gowns copied from the models brought from Paris a month or so ago, many of which were described in these columns. The best looking things, by far, were the black velvet semi-evening gowns made with slightly low necks and sleeves reaching half way to the elbow, worn with big, black picture hats of maline or velvet. One black velvet gown was trimmed with simple bands of ermine at the ends of the sleeves and nothing at all at the neck line. The hat that was worn with it was made of black tulle—many thicknesses for the soft, gathered crown, two thicknesses for the inside portion of the brim, and only one thickness for the extreme edge of the brim, which was bent and rolled over the head and in front of the eyes. The illusive quality of these three thicknesses of maline was fascinating. The hat was trimmed with dark purple—almost black—grapes, three bunches of them, combined with dark green velvet leaves laid flat on the transparent brim, and with a simple bow of black velvet ribbon, adding one more depth of black to the general scheme.

A dark blue tulle gown was seen, made with a draped overdress of cream-colored Spanish lace and a girdle of dark blue sparkling spangles. It was worn with a dark blue feather picture hat.

Gowns with bodices of sequins were not entirely neglected at this colorful gathering, and there were many dresses of draped metal brocade with flat, sweeping trains, winding gracefully about the feet, and only touches of maline to relieve the draping.

RUSSIAN REVOLUTION ULTIMATE BOON TO ALLIES

By SAMUEL N. HARPER.
Head of the Slavonic Department, University of Chicago.

In a recent number of Punch the picture shows little brother howling vehemently. The sympathetic passer-by questions little sister; who replies, "Oh, he's worrying about Russia."

There has been cause for worry as one followed the course of events in Russia these last months. There is still cause for worry, for the situation is serious, and tends to become more so every day. But it does no good to "howl," and much less to whine. One must keep one's nerve, and also frequently one's sense of humor. The latter does not imply flippancy, which would be inexcusable when we all are facing crises. But it has been distinctly amusing at times as one watched the simple, direct Russian try out a theory he had always believed would work; the results were sometimes distinctly humorous.

They told us of one incident that occurred while the "democratization" of the army was in its first stages. At that time the "committees" were the authority, and everything had to be put to the vote. During a counter-attack a regiment was seen to halt at the foot of a hill which it was to take. As it stood there the hands went up. The observers were in consternation. This regiment was one of the best, and here it was surrendering. But presently the regiment resumed the advance, and after a stubborn fight took the hill. The observers rushed up and asked what had happened at the foot of the hill. The soldiers explained very simply that they were taking the vote on the order to take the hill, and having voted to take it, went ahead.

Tragic things also happened in this "revolutionary" army; one hesitates to recall the details. In the worst cases one sought, and often found evidence of the enemy's hand continuing its dirty work. But frequently it was the blind but honest groping of a simple folk, uneducated, once deceived, and therefore suspicious of those who used the word "authority." They were being again deceived by German agents or by demagogues and fanatics, and very funny things were happening. But one had to keep one's nerve.

It did not help matters to become impatient, though many did so. The English and French had had three years of it, and their patience, perhaps even their sympathy, was being exhausted. For over two years they had to deal with the old régime, which was honeycombed with incompetence, corruption, and treason. The delays and disasters, which might have been avoided, had cost them many lives. Then came the revolution, with fresh delays and more military disasters. While the Russians worked out—that is talked and discussed—the revolution, the killing continued on the western front. One might be very sympathetic and understand, but one could not help being a bit impatient.

Some people have not understood, and have been neither sympathetic nor patient. The present writer was nonplussed on several occasions by the statement: "These Russians should not have their revolution while a war was going on." And the statement was made by a man—in several instances an American—who was in Russia before and during the revolution. The answer to the statement is the simple question, "Who made the revolution of March?" For it came as the result of the stupidity or perhaps deliberate treason of the men deposed by the revolution.

Facts will bear out the following summary of the situation: Had the present leaders in Russia been unable to direct the revolution with some measure of success, Russia would have been out of the war last March. Their success may seem very meagre to some, for Russia is today not much of a factor from the purely military standpoint. She is keeping occupied fewer divisions of the enemy than she held at the eastern line in February under the old régime. But again one must recall that, not only would Russia have been betrayed herself, but she would have been made to betray her allies, had the "revolution" gone as its real instigators—men like Stürmer and Protopopov—perhaps deliberately planned. For they had brought Russia to a state of anarchy which made it materially and morally impossible for her to continue. Perhaps they were not clever enough to plan it deliberately, in conjunction with the Kaiser and for German marks. But they most certainly were getting ready to urge on England and France the necessity of entering into negotiations with Germany, and they alone of all Russians enjoyed the confidence of the sovereign and exercised for him his "strong authority."

One can, therefore, say that much of the chaos and anarchy in Russia was produced, perhaps deliberately, by the old crowd. Revolutionary Russia inherited this anarchy from the old régime. The revolution contributed its share, but the complete disorganization of Russian life dates back to the old régime. Food riots in Petrograd were the immediate cause of the revolution. The transportation was in chaos before March. Industries were becoming more and more disorganized, and production decreasing during the last month of the old régime. The workmen were getting out of hand largely because of the blind repressive policy of the gendarmes of Nicholas II. The peasants were refusing to sell their grain because of the stupid program devised by the Czar's bureaucrats. The paper ruble, printed as fast as the press would run, was depreciating from day to day. So all the crises which revolutionary Russia has had to face were in considerable measure part of the heritage from the old régime.

The revolution increased the chaos and anarchy, despite the efforts of the new leaders. The new men made mistakes, but some were inevitable—they could not act otherwise. One of the first acts of the Provisional Government was to abolish the death penalty. We have seen the disastrous results of this step, particularly in the breakdown of discipline at the front. But the death penalty had already been abolished for all except political crimes for over a century. The first speech in the first Russian Parliament in 1906 had demanded the complete abolition of the death penalty. Could the new Russia forget this fact? It had to abolish the death penalty, and it could not say "except in cases," for the old régime always provided for public jury trial "except where special provision of the law," &c.

The new men who came in to save the situation in March had to solve the problems created by others. And they could not use methods of government without which large communities cannot be held together even in normal times. For they did not inherit, together with the chaos, the weapons that could be used to clear up the disorders. The political ideals of the old crowd were very limited. They knew only "strong authority," "discipline," and "order," and their idea of government was to "police" everything and everybody, and answer every criticism by repression, and with force if necessary. The old crowd discredited not only the ideas represented by the words "strong authority" and "order," but the words themselves. As Prince Lvoff explained to me one day, he could not arrest a Lenine or a Trotzky and close down their newspapers at the beginning. That would have meant simply a return to the old régime.

Unable and unwilling to repress, the new leaders could not even demand "order," and the recognition of "authority." For three months one had "government by appeal," with no physical but simply moral force behind the appeal. So one had "anarchy," but it was peaceful anarchy. The hastily organized militia and the sense of individual responsibility maintained order, except where the criminal elements were at work. But there were very few of these, though the field was wide open to them. What gave ground for hope to the outside observers was the absence of violent anarchy. Kronstadt made trouble, and there were brutal killings of landlords, factory owners, and especially officers; but on the background of 180,000,000 people in revolution, covering one-seventh of the surface of the earth, these acts of violence were distressing but not alarming. And the preachers were urging further and even violent anarchy, and were carrying on their fanatical propaganda without cessation.

Finally, the preachers of anarchy came out in open rebellion. Then at last repressive measures could be used, and after the abortive Bolshevik uprising of July arrests were made and armed force was used against the extremists. The new Minister of the Interior, a Socialist, forbade street meetings and street demonstrations. There must be "revolutionary order," he declared, and a "strong revolutionary authority" must be exercised and recognized, and there must be "revolutionary discipline" in the "revolutionary army." The adjective "revolutionary" worried some. "Forget the revolution and get back to the war" was their thought. But the Russian could not forget the revolution. The watchwords, "Save the revolution," "Consolidate the conquests of the revolution" were not hysterical cries; they had a real value—a spiritual value. And one could not then save the revolution by repression and force, and one could not go on with the war until the conquests were "consolidated."

Kerensky had a difficult team to drive—revolution and war. When he pulled up now one horse and now the other he was accused of hesitating. In August, at the State conference called by the Provisional Government, a distinct warning was given to Kerensky and his colleagues. They were told that they must establish "a strong authority." "It is the next to the last warning," wrote one leader. Kerensky probably understood the warning, but was unable to take it. Then came the last warning, the Korniloff affair of September. Korniloff was striving for a "strong authority," as was Kerensky. At one moment they were working together to the same end. Then they broke, partly as the result of a misunderstanding, and seemed to be in opposed camps.

Kerensky again held to the same policy, and because of his honesty secured the support of the Liberals and the business men, who entered his new Cabinet. But he would not be a "Napoleon," for that would have spelled disloyalty to the revolution. Many Russians, and more foreigners, called for a "strong man," a Napoleon. They demanded that Kerensky "suppress," "establish order," "shoot down traitors." But he waited, had to wait, until a clearly treacherous move on the part of the extremists would justify repression. This came at last, and Kerensky marched against the rebels. The outcome of the conflict is still uncertain, perhaps only unknown. The reports from Russia are conflicting. But the ultimate defeat of the Bolshevikí is sure; they will be suppressed either by Kerensky or by another representing law and order, but loyal to the revolution.

"Kerensky should have acted before," one hears and reads, especially in the comments of outsiders; and many Russians expressed the same view. A year ago the present writer was forced constantly to "explain away" the use of repressive measures in Russia, for they were clearly handicapping those who wished to strengthen Russia in her struggle to prosecute the war honestly and forcefully. Now one has to "explain away" the refusal of those responsible for the Government of Russia to take severe repressive measures. They are consolidating the conquests of the revolution," has been the answer, and it must be accepted.

For, though we are disturbed and worried by what is going on in Russia, we certainly wish the success of the revolution of March. We must accept the events of the last months as an experiment in social revolution, which fortunately has failed. We must realize that some Russians have behaved like "slaves in mutiny," to use the phrase of Kerensky himself, but that the majority of Russians have shown self-restraint and common sense that deserved admiration. The simple people—the broader masses—had to think it out and talk it over, and perhaps try it out and even fight for it. As one American said to an audience of Russian soldiers, "Liberty is a valuable thing, and you have to pay dearly for it. In America we fought eight years, and then four more years, for liberty."

Americans who have "lived" the revolution in Russia have understood it, have sympathized with it, and have been patient, because they saw that there was no real ground for impatience. They saw that if our aims were to "make the world safe for democracy," then one of our duties was to understand and welcome what was going on in Russia and help.

It has been gratifying to note the attitude taken by the majority of our newspapers these last two weeks. On the whole it has shown patience, sympathetic understanding, and faith in the ultimate triumph of real democracy in Russia.

SOCIAL ACTIVITIES INCREASE

Many Smart Affairs Planned for the Week—Society Knits Socks at the Opera and While Skating—Debutantes Advised to "Roll Up Their Sleeves" for War Service—Revival of Informal Dances for Charity.

THE last week of November promises to be quite active, and will be dotted with smart weddings, dances, skating parties, conferences, and several débutante presentations. Thanksgiving will add to the entertainment features of the week, with the service uniform in evidence at many of the family reunions. In fact, a lot of people have asked Uncle Sam's boys to dinner, in addition to their regular guests. A note to the Patriotic Service League, 2,741 Broadway, will bring sailor or soldier boys, far away from the delicious home turkey dinner, to your board.

Everybody seems to be knitting. There was a knitting-skating party held last week at one of the ice rinks. Knitting outfits can even be had now at the 5 and 10 cent stores. The Red Cross has sent out an appeal to speed up the work on sweaters, wristlets, mufflers, helmets, and socks, so great is the present demand for knitted articles. Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt knitted during intermissions at the opera on Monday night.

The second Monday night of the opera was brilliant socially, but the flash of jewels was even more modified than at the opening night. Mrs. Roosevelt was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Elon Huntington Hooker of 907 Fifth Avenue, in parterre box 25. Mrs. George J. Gould made her first appearance, in black, with pearls, and Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Carhart, newcomers, entertained in Box 28. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis L. Clarke had as their guests Mr. and Mrs. Finley J. Shepard and Judge and Mrs. William H. Moore. Others attending the opening of the second week were Mrs. Richard T. Wilson, Mrs. Arthur Curtiss James, Mrs. James B. Duke, Mrs. F. Egerton Webb, Mrs. Joseph E. Stevens, Mrs. William Watts Sherman, Mrs. James F. D. Lanier, Mrs. Robert P. Huntington, Mr. and Mrs. James W. Gerard, and Major and Mrs. George B. McClellan.

The first of the Four Junior Dances will be held on Thursday at the Plaza and the next one Dec. 21. The patronesses for these dances are Mrs. Daniel F. Kellogg, Mrs. D. Hunter McAlpin, Mrs. Charles M. Clark, Mrs. J. E. R. Carpenter, Mrs. Herbert Dean, Mrs. Edward Dwight, Mrs. Parker D. Handy, and Mrs. Charles S. Haight.

That it is not to be a danceless season altogether is now evidenced by several formal announcements. The first of a series of musicales and dances given for the benefit of the Soldiers and Sailors Home Club Canteen, under the auspices of the National Special Aid Society, is to be held on Tuesday evening at 12 East Forty-ninth Street. Mrs. J. Stewart Barney, Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Mrs. Edward R. Stettinius, Mrs. Harold Pratt, and Mrs. Henry Sanford are among the patronesses.

An invitation supper dance was held on Friday night at 44 East Fifty-eighth Street in aid of the babies' ward of the Post-Graduate Hospital, with Mrs. R. T. Wilson, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Mrs. J. Philip Benkard, and Mrs. E. Lounsbery Perry among those in charge.

Two débutantes across the river are soon to be introduced formally, one this week. They are the granddaughters of the late Charles Pratt of Brooklyn. Mrs. Frederick B. Pratt is to give a reception for Miss Helen L. Pratt, at their Clinton Avenue residence, on Tuesday. There was one débutante affair in this borough last week.

The débutantes and members of the Junior League throughout the country are getting some sound editorial advice from the current number of their periodical. "All outward and visible signs of that ridiculous term 'social position' ahculd be abandoned today," runs the editorial. "War is a great leveler. This war will be won by the men of the line and by the women in line working at home. Therefore, roll up your sleeves, forget all but the fact that you are one of the Allies, and if you earn the right, then, perhaps, the golden spoon, with which you may have been incumbered when very young, may be converted into golden chevrons."

It seems strange to read that the one hundred and thirty-fourth anniversary of the evacuation of the City of New York by the British troops is to be celebrated this week, with England now our big ally. The Sons of the Revolution will hold a meeting at Delmonico's tomorrow night in celebration, and a Londoner, H. S. Perris, Secretary of the British-American Centenary Commission, is to speak. W. Lanier Washington, a direct descendant of two of the brothers of General George Washington, whom he represents in the Society of the Cincinnati, is to deliver an illustrated lecture on "The Homes of the Washingtons in England and Virginia." Members of the Meadow Brook Hunt Club have decided that its forthcoming point-to-point steeplechase will be confined to army officers only. Many of the club members are in service, and entries are expected from officers stationed at Camp Upton and Camp Mills.

ANNOUNCEMENTS of weddings and engagements experienced a rise during the week, after a decided slump. There are fluctuations in the marriage mart just as in the money markets, and the same comparison might be applied to engagements. Of course the only cause for the increase or decrease of weddings and engagements is the season of the year, and just because they happen to come all at once, or none at all.

Wednesday seems to be a popular day for town weddings this season. The most important ones took place on the Wednesday following the formal opening of the social season. A fortnight later they will again bunch on Wednesday.

An interesting wedding tomorrow, however, will be that of Miss Margaret G. La Farge, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. Grant La Farge of 324 East Twenty-second Street, and Lieutenant William Henry Osborn, O. R. C., son of Mr. and Mrs. William Church Osborn, which is to be solemnized in the chantry of Grace Church.

The bride is to be unattended. Mr. Osborn will have his brother, Earl D. Osborn, invalided here from service in France, as his best man.

A small reception is to follow the ceremony at the home of Mr. and Mrs. La Farge.

Lieutenant Osborn is stationed at Camp Wadsworth with the 107th Infantry, and he will take his bride to Spartanburg, S. C., after a brief bridal journey.

The marriage of Miss Julia Gilbert, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cass Gilbert, and Charles Morgan Post is to take place on Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock at the Church of the Incarnation, Thirty-fifth Street and Madison Avenue. The subsequent reception at the Gilbert home, 4 East Sixty-fourth Street, is to be small.

Miss Emily Gilbert is to be her sister's maid of honor, and the Misses Augusta Dixon, Lois Hall, Mary Haskell, Gertrude Pardee, Claire Van Lennep, and Jarvis Wyeth are to be the bridesmaids.

Henry Post Morgan is to act as his brother's best man, and the ushers will include Morgan Post, Cass Gilbert, Jr., who is to marry Miss Elizabeth J. Wyeth on Saturday; Killaen Van Rensselaer, Walter Herrick, Arthur Randall, George Brower, and Edmund Fairfax.

Miss Angeline J. Krech, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alvin W. Krech of 17 East Seventieth Street, and Oliver Burr James, son of Dr. and Mrs. Walter B. James, are to be married in St. Bartholomew's Church on Wednesday, with a small reception afterward at the home of the bride's parents. The Rev. Leighton Parks and the Rev. Endicott Peabody are to officiate.

The bride is to be attended by her sister, Miss Helen Krech, as maid of honor, and the other attendants will include Mrs. Shepard Krech and the Misses Margaret Krech and Helen and Eunice James, sisters of the bridegroom.

William Rockefeller is to be best man, and Francklyn Lawrence and Hamilton Hadley will serve as ushers.

The wedding of Miss Gertrude C. Livingston, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Duane Livingston of Garden City, L. I., and Henry C. Kittredge, son of Professor and Mrs. George L. Kittredge of Cambridge, Mass., is to be celebrated on Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the chantry of Grace Church.

Miss Marion Lockman Hees, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Rathbun Hees of 875 Park Avenue, will be married to William M. Sebring on Wednesday afternoon, in St. Agnes's Chapel, with the subsequent reception at the Hotel Plaza.

In Philadelphia, on that day, Lieutenant J. Francis R. Packard, son of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Packard of 981 North Park Avenue, will be married to Miss Mary T. Denckla, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herman A. Denckla of Chestnut Hill, a pleasant suburb of the Quaker City.

Miss Charlotte F. Werner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter M. Werner of 124 West Fifty-fifth Street, and Donald V. Lowe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert G. Lowe of Tenafly, N. J., are to be married on Saturday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock in St. Thomas's Church, with a small reception afterward at the Ritz-Carlton.

Miss Werner will have Miss Elizabeth Gifford, a cousin, as her maid of honor, and Mrs. Emerson Bigelow will be the other attendant. Malcolm B. Lowe is to act as best man for his brother.

The Rev. George R. Van De Water, rector of St. Andrew's Church, is to officiate on Saturday at the marriage of his niece, Miss Cornelia Van De Water of Flushing, L. I., and Harold Carey of Hartford, Conn., which is to be celebrated in St. George's Church at Flushing.

Miss Mary Pinchot Eno, a cousin of Gifford Pinchot and Amos Pinchot, and whose marriage to H. Bjornstrom-Steffanson will be solemnized on Dec. 12 at her residence, 56 East Fifty-seventh Street, will have her two nieces, the Misses Antoinette and Marie Graves, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. William Leon Graves, as her attendants. Her uncle, William Phelps Eno, will give her in marriage, and the Rev. Oliver Bronson, now of Salem, Mass., is to perform the ceremony in the presence of the immediate family and a few close friends. The reception which will follow is to be very small.

Stephan Bjornstrom is to be his brother's best man, and there are to be no ushers. Miss Eno is a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John C. Eno and a niece of Mrs. Charles Boughton Wood and William Phelps Eno.

Miss Louise Dickinson, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Gordon K. Dickinson, who is to wed Edward F. Swenson of Albany on Dec. 8 in St. Thomas's Church, will have her four sisters as her attendants, Mrs. Frederick H. McCoun, Mrs. Thomas R. Shepard, and the Misses Claire and Ruth Dickinson, also Miss Louise Swenson, a sister of the bridegroom, who is to act as maid of honor.

Clarence E. Swenson is to be best man, and the ushers will include Lieutenant Herbert Swenson, U. S. R., Captain Henry P. Warren, Jr., U. S. R., Lieutenant De Witt J. Payne, U. S. R., and Henry L. Bogert, Jr., Donald B. Abbott, and Wendell W. Faunce.

The reception will be held at the Gotham.

Mrs. Duncan-Hunter of Providence, R. I., has announced the marriage of her daughter, Miss Frances G. Hunter, to Curtis B. Munson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Munson of 46 West Fifty-second Street, which took place on Oct. 27 last. The bride is a niece of Henry P. Lippitt, former United States Senator from Rhode Island. Mr. Munson and his brother, Alexander M. Munson, are members in France of the Lafayette Escadrille.

Lieutenant Edward Willis and his bride, who was Miss Dorothy Bard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Bard of Summit, N. J., will return to Spartanburg, S. C., after their honeymon trip, as Lieutenant Willis is a member of the Machine Gun Company of the 107th Infantry, at Camp Wadsworth. They were married on Nov. 17 in Calvary Church, Summit, N. J.

Miss Hortense Smith, daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Alfred Franklin Smith of St. Louis, and Amos Mansfield Kidder of Englewood, N. J., were married on Nov. 17 at the home of the bride's parents. The wedding was to have taken place early in December, but the date was advanced in order that Mr. Kidder, who has just completed his training in the aviation section of the Signal Corps, might take advantage of his furlough. He was formerly Cadet Sergeant at Scott Field, Belleville, Ill.

Miss Louise Elliot Flint, daughter of George E. Flint and a granddaughter of the late Dr. Austin Flint, was married on Tuesday to James Lanman Hubbard, U. S. N. R. F., at the home of her aunt, Miss Annie Flint, 118 East Nineteenth Street, the Rev. Henry Darlington, a son of Bishop Darlington, officiating. Mr. Hubbard is at present stationed at New London, Conn., with the Engineering and Ordnance Department of the Navy and only had forty-eight hours leave of absence for his marriage. He is a son of Charles L. Hubbard, President of the Thames National Bank of Norwich.

THERE are few engagements nowadays without some war interest, and no long drawn out alliances as in days of peace. The majority of engagements are followed up, often in a few weeks or even days, with nuptials, and the young couple rush off to some war camp centre, for leave of absence is growing shorter with the advance of Winter and the intensity of war work.

Mrs. George Ide Malcom of 116 East Sixty-third Street has announced the engagement of her daughter, Miss Hope Malcom, to Lieutenant Charles Thurlow, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Thurlow of Newburyport, Mass., a graduate of Harvard, class of '12, and now in the aviation section of the Signal Corps.

Miss Malcom was introduced several Winters ago, and is a member of the Junior League. Her brothers, J. Banham Malcom and George I. Malcom, are in the Naval Reserve, while another brother, Julian Malcom, expects a commission in the United States Army.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernesto G. Fabbri of 7 East Ninety-fifth Street have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Teresa Fabbri, a débutante of the last season, to James Cameron Clark, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. William Clark of Bernardsville, N. J., and this city. Miss Fabbri is a granddaughter of Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard and a great-granddaughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. William H. Vanderbilt. Mr. Clark is a Harvard man and belongs to the Union Club. He is attached to the aviation section of the Signal Corps at San Antonio, Texas.

Mrs. Frederick Charles Prentiss of 1 Riverside Drive has announced the engagement of her daughter, Miss Frederica Carlotta Prentiss, to John T. Hanemann, son of Mrs. Henry W. Hanemann of this city. Mr. Hanemann is a graduate of Columbia, class of '02.

From Boston comes the announcement of the engagement of Mrs. Marguerite G. Ginn, widow of Edwin Ginn, the publisher, who established the World Peace Foundation, to Dr. Hunter Robb of Cleveland. The wedding will probably take place next January.

Mr. and Mrs. John F. Lane of 61 West Eighty-seventh Street have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Marjory Browne Lane, to Paul Rupplinger, Maréchal des Logis, Fifty-ninth Artillerie, France. Miss Lane, who was educated in Paris, has for some time been associated with the work of the American Girls Aid in Paris. She sailed last June to join the Misses Hollingsworth at the headquarters of their society, and has remained there ever since.

ALL social roads will lead this week to Hero Land at the Grand Central Palace, for the great bazaar promises to arouse the interest of society as never before in war relief work. It was opened last night, an auspicious occasion, and will run for nineteen days.

Owing to the war the annual play for the benefit of Grosvenor House has been abandoned, and a week's rummage sale will be held instead, beginning Dec. 3, at 17 East Fifty-ninth Street. The Misses Margaret Allen, Juliet Bartlett, Augusta Dixon, Frances P. Field, Elizabeth R. Thompson, and Caramal Carroll are among the young women in charge.

Mrs. Joseph B. Bissell of 46 West Fifty-sixth Street will hold a meeting in connection with the Women's Committee on Knitted Woolen Articles for the members of the Bellevue Base Hospital Unit on Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

An interesting exhibition of paintings for the benefit of the Bronxville, Westchester County, Branch of the American Red Cross, will open tomorrow at the Hotel Gramatan, to continue until Dec. 2. A private view today will be the opening function.

SAYS WAR WILL END STATE SOCIALISM

The war has done more to make all classes hate the very idea of State socialism than could have been achieved by all the newspapers, books and speeches had they been directed to this one purpose, in the opinion of The London Economist, which points out that while all have recognized that a great and increasing amount of State control is necessary while the war lasts, they are "most heartily sick of it."

"But while our experiences of State-controlled railways, and ships, and coal mines, and engineering works, and food, and drink, and newspapers make us long for the day when the brief Defense of the Realm act, with its enormous ever-growing comet's tail of regulations and orders, may pass out of our horizon," says The Economist, "it is becoming widely realized that we cannot go back to our old free, untrammeled individualism. We can no longer conduct business, each man for himself, each industry for itself, on the principle of the devil-take-the-hindmost. Co-operation under State compulsion has shown us what might be achieved by co-operation under voluntary organization. Inefficient as is industry under Government control and management, yet we have seen how very great was our frictional wastage before the war under our old free competitive system.

"The country, by mobilizing its man and woman power, and directing it to one common purpose, has achieved results which are the wonder and admiration of the world. Five millions of men have been withdrawn from productive work and put to the most expensive and wasteful of all works, yet the country has carried on for three years, and the individual citizens have suffered less of hardship, even of inconvenience, than have the people in any one of the allied countries, or than have our enemies. We have seen what organized production can achieve even when the inefficient and lumbering State is the organizer, and we have learned that the productive capacity of this England of ours is very much greater than any one would have believed to be possible before the war.

"If we can get quit of war, and the burden of preparation for a future war, there is no reason why every man and woman in this country should not have all the necessaries, and a good many of the luxuries of life in return for honest, steady work. If industrial production in peace comes to be organized with a view to the greatest happiness of the greatest number, and our citizens can be taught to take a saner view concerning the uses to be made of their money, there will be enough available for every one who cares to work for it."

The Economist argues that while the organization of industries on co-operative principles is looked upon with a kindly eye and as necessary to the efficient future production of the country, yet there are great and obvious dangers which have to be faced.

"We cannot as a people," it says, "allow our chief industries to become great rings or kartels maintained simply to fleece the consumer. That is their inevitable tendency, and if those who guide them have not the good sense to see the danger, and to avoid it, we shall have our old enemy State Control returning fully armed with the unanimous support of the consumers. We have our rings already in some industries, and we do not love them. Industry must be organized in the mass, but it must not grow into rings. The British trust, on the American model, fenced about with protective tariffs, will not be endured in this country.

"If our co-operative organizers are wise they will add not only labor, but also the consumer, to the circle of their beneficiaries."

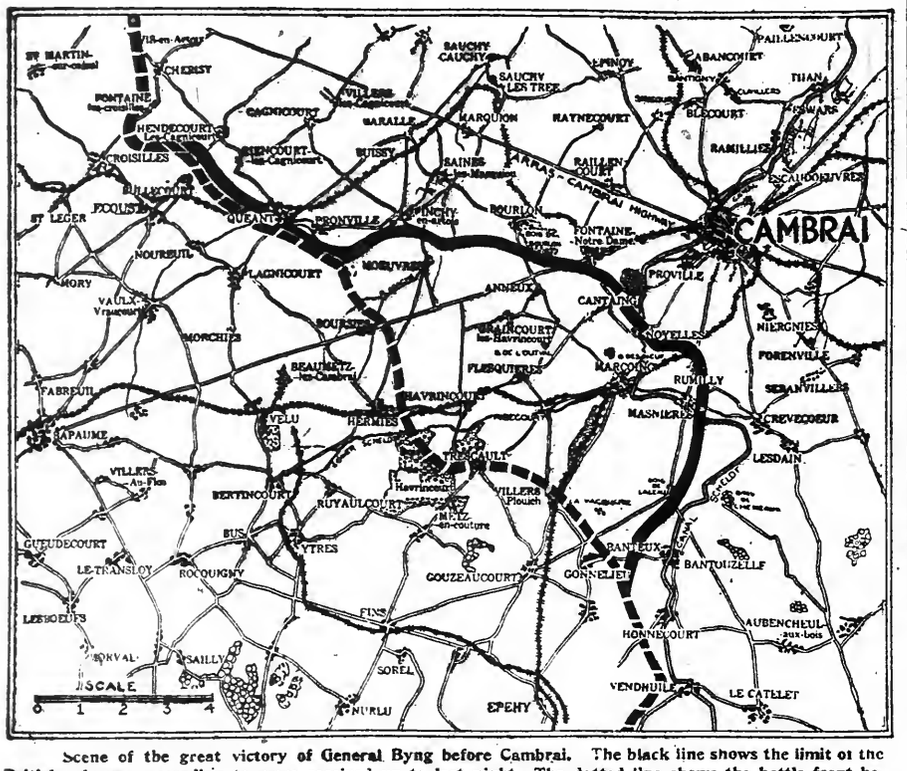
WEEK'S BATTLES IN EUROPE AS SEEN BY MILITARY CRITIC

British Drive at Cambrai May Force Big German Retreat—Italians Holding Piave Line—Advance in Palestine May Affect Turks About Bagdad.



Scene of the great victory of General Byng before Cambrai. The black line shows the limit of the British advance, according to news received up to last night. The dotted line shows the battle front before General Byng's surprise attack was launched against the German positions.

By a Military Expert.

Copyright, 1917, by The New York Times Company.

THE week has seen the most dramatic episode on the western front since the battle of the Marne. In a single day's fighting against the strongest part of the German line in the west the British have penetrated the German positions to a depth half as great as in the entire Somme fighting of last year, and have occupied half as much territory as was gained in the Somme battle.

This was accomplished without artillery preparation, without advertising, quietly and effectively. Whereas it has always been the rôle of artillery to destroy the wire entanglements, this time the tanks were used for the purpose, great numbers of them tearing great holes in the German defense and permitting the infantry to rush through. Before the German artillery could really get into action the British and German infantry were closely engaged.

The extent of this gain was undoubtedly as much a surprise to the British as it was to the Germans. Had the British any idea of what they were about to accomplish the entire German line would now be in retreat. A great mass of infantry, had it been available, could have been thrown into the breach torn in the German line and, working against the flank and rear of the German positions, it could have put the entire line to rout. While the British success is remarkable as it is, there was the chance of turning it into almost a decisive victory had sufficient preparations been made to take advantage of it. Of course, it would have been expensive. The loss might have been appalling. But it would not have been as great as the aggregate loss will be in the series of battles which must ensue before the Germans are driven behind the Oise. But the victory already gained is not to be belittled and may well bring a revolution in trench fighting.

In seeking for an object for the British attack it is not necessary to look to any other field than that of France. When Germany is attacking in one field and the Allies begin an offensive in another it has become stereotyped to state that the object is to relieve the German pressure. It is also the most obvious. There was nothing in this latest move, however, to indicate that it was done with the idea of improving the Italian situation. In the first place, the Italian situation was getting along very well of itself. Indeed, the Teutonic attacks had practically died down after having themselves to check against the Piave front and that of the mountains between the Piave and the Brenta. Again, had the British object been to draw off the Germans from Italy, the most natural thing would have been to have indulged in the usual artillery preparation of several days, so that, fearing attack, the Germans would have begun their preparations to meet it.

The first object was to try a great experiment, the experiment of breaking through the German line without the use of artillery. Back in September, 1915, when the British stormed the German positions in Loos while the French struck simultaneously in the Champagne, it was thought that a brief but heavy artillery preparation might cause the German line to be positively ruptured. A few days' fighting, however, with cruel losses, proved the fallacy of this theory. It was recognized then that the only thing was shell — shell in unlimited quantities, shell to destroy every vestige of wire entanglements and wreck the German trenches. When artillery had been created in sufficient quantities for this purpose we saw the battle of the Somme. The German trench system had been mastered.

This forced the change in the rigid system of defense to one somewhat more elastic, with the result that the pill boxes were adopted. In Flanders we found these bearing the entire burden of the defense; elsewhere they were combined with the trench system. Here again it was a question of massed artillery. But artillery preparation has several disadvantages. In the first place, it entirely negatives the idea of surprise, and surprise is just as important a factor in this war as it was in any other war of history. It is rather difficult to conceal from an enemy the fact that you are going to attack when, for days in advance, you are pounding his lines with everything in the shape of artillery which you possess. The result is that, having warning, not alone of the probable time of attack but of the probable location, he is able not only to concentrate his artillery so that his barrage begins with yours, but also to concentrate his men so that yours will be met with an equal number.

Again, there is the question of the ground over which the advance must be made. Most of us have seen in photographs how pitted and pock-marked the ground is after the usual artillery preparation. Add to this a spell of rainy weather, and No Man's Land becomes almost impassable.

On the other hand, if the ground is free from traps and pits, the infantry will move much more quickly, much more steadily, and with much more life. The mental attitude of the men as they move on cannot but be affected by conditions under foot. It is the combination of these elements, all of which have invariably been present in former attacks, which has made the advance in any individual effort almost insignificant.

It was to get away from this that the great experiment was tried. The foundation of the success was laid first on the element of surprise. It was realized that there could not be even a small success if any intimation of the plan leaked through to the German commanders. The Germans must be caught napping and before their artillery could get to work. The next consideration was that the tanks, secretly mobilized, should break down the wire entanglements, usurping the function of the heavy artillery and the high explosive shell, and open up gaps through which the infantry could advance. The intermediate spaces between gaps could then be readily flanked.

The second object was naturally to gain ground toward the important strategical base of Cambrai. We can never get away from the fundamental fact, established at the battle of the Aisne, which followed close on the heels of the Marne, that the measure of success in any individual engagement is to be found in the relative casualty list.

Where black and white join is the present battle line, after the British victory before Cambrai. The white line shows the extreme limit of the German advance toward Paris.

To put the thing in its most elemental and brutal form, it is a killing match. And if the Allies can put hors de combat more of the Germans than they themselves lose in the effort, the result, regardless of the territory regained, is an allied victory. Nevertheless, there is another object besides the mere destruction of the Teuton man power—the recovery, for a civilized people, of the occupied portions of France and Belgium. And, in so far as the allied advance of the week has contributed to this end, it is a signal victory.

From Oppy south as far as the junction of the Aisne with the Oise Canal, the German line a week ago was exactly where it was when the German retreat came to an end. The line thus held was a line selected with the view solely to its defensive value. It was not selected in the heat and pressure of battle. On the contrary, its selection was the result of months of careful study and investigation of favorable features of terrain, which were modified so as to give it the greatest possible strength. It was against this line at Quéant and Bullecourt that so many British attacks were broken last Spring in their efforts to penetrate the defense. This line was, therefore, justly considered to be the strongest position held by the Germans since trench warfare on the western front was established.

In addition to the basic strength of the position it is admirably fed by a series of large railroad centres, each of which is an important strategical point. These are, as we move northward from St. Quentin, Cambrai, Douai, Lille, Menin, Roulers, and Ostend. Naturally, the breaking of any one of these links practically destroys the chain. Cambrai, while not yet taken, is seriously in danger, and the battle for its possession is still under way as this is being written. The British lines are quite close, so that it may well be doubted whether its value at present is very great.

In addition to the effect of the proximity of the British lines to Cambrai there is an element in the position itself which merits consideration. The line of defense of the Cambrai position was the line of the Scheldt River. The defensive on the western front is so strong that even a small stream is sufficient to produce an effective barrier to an advance. We have seen how effective the Somme was in the efforts to take Péronne and likewise how effective the Aisette was in holding the French in check. But the British were able to cross the Scheldt (this river is the same as the Escaut) at Marcoing and Masnières and advance to the outskirts of Rumilly. The length of river held by the British is only about two miles, and their hold on it is by no means secure. The Germans are making every effort to drive them back to the western bank, but so far have not met with the slightest success.

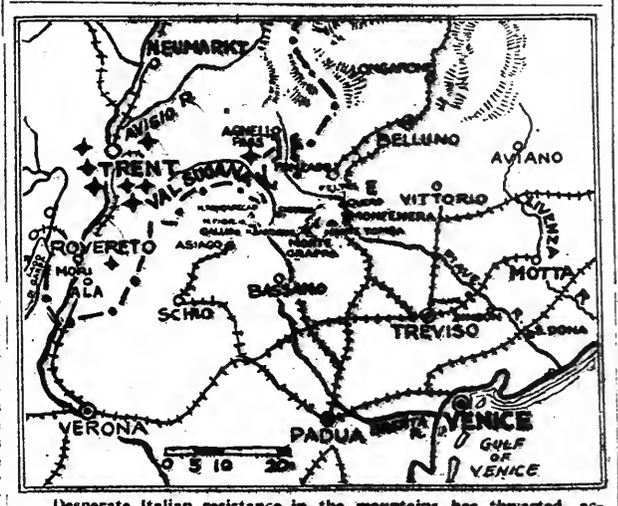
The British position is not without its element of considerable danger. It must be remembered that they are fighting with the river at their back and that if an overwhelming German force is sent against them they may be driven back against the stream and many of them captured. This is undoubtedly what the Germans are trying to effect. But if this is not done, the small force on the east bank will probably be able to clear the passage for their comrades on the other bank and thus put the entire east bank in British hands. Thus the main barrier to the capture of Cambrai will be passed and the entire defensive line turned. If such a move is made the Germans will be forced to retreat westward, and this time their retreat will be accompanied by much greater difficulties than the retreat of last year.

The fact that the British, through an unprecedented use of the tanks, were able to break through the German lines as was done this last week does not mean that this can be continued indefinitely. Under the conditions previously mentioned there does not seem to be any reason why the success cannot be repeated. But it is extremely doubtful that it can be done again in the same sector. In other words, when the British go to follow up their success against Cambrai, it will have to be done in the more usual way, with heavy artillery preparation, followed by the infantry, and with the attendant expense and loss. But there are several sectors on the British front just as important as Cambrai, which offer the same facilities for exactly the same tactics. A repetition of the success in other parts of the line is, therefore, something which we may expect later on.

Last week I called attention to the fact that all of Germany's offensives since the war began have been checked just before Germany had reaped the fruits of her initial successes. Whether this will prove true in the case of Italy remains, of course, to be seen. Up to the present time Germany has been unable to drive her lines forward to any appreciable extent since they became established on the east bank of the Piave River. The fighting this week has been one of a shifting offensive, the shifts being separated by a brief period of almost absolute quiet, as if the struggling forces were pausing for breath. The early days of the week were marked by a series of heavy attacks along the Piave by both the German and the Austrian forces. Several times it seemed as if a crossing were inevitable, but in each instance, Italian reserves, thrown into the fighting in the nick of time, succeeded in driving the invaders back. The losses in these attacks were extremely heavy, particularly on the part of the Teutonic forces, which, having to cross an open river under fire, were unable to combat the fire of the Italian machine guns. Apparently, attacks along the river have been given up as too costly and too unproductive of results except heavy additions to the casualty lists. British artillery has come up, assisting, with the largest guns, those of the Italians. In the face of anything like an equal artillery fire such a crossing becomes a hopeless endeavor.

As was pointed out last week also, the decision is not likely to come on the Piave. The L-shaped line of the Italians, one leg running westward through the mountains and the other south along the Piave, is an ever-present source of danger, because any break in one leg necessarily involves the other by exposing its flank. But it also exposes the flank of the Brenta line, should the break come on the east and west section of the line. When it became apparent that the attacks along the Piave were futile, the scene of activity shifted to the stretch of line in the mountains between the Piave and the Brenta. Here, in the last few days, there has been some of the bitterest fighting of the war. The Italians, who have caught their breath since the retreat and have now grown accustomed to the German attacks with all of their ferocity and disregard of loss, have fought steadily every foot of the way and in general have given the Germans as hard blows as they have received. The gains have been entirely unimportant, as far as the actual territory gained is concerned, although the Germans have made slight gains to the south which bring them somewhat nearer the plains. In general, however, it may be said that the situation has undergone no change since last week.

This is a hopeful sign. The experience of the last three years has shown that it almost inevitably has happened that, when an offensive of this character slows down and finally is halted, it is difficult to get up speed again. In consequence, the battle has gradually lessened in violence and eventually has stopped. That such a thing will occur in Italy is probable unless the Germans can achieve the victory within the next three weeks. To break the line along the Piave seems to be impossible. Within three weeks the Winter will be in full blast in the mountains, blocking the German lines of communication with snowdrifts and making movement difficult. By that time, also, the supply of both guns and shell from the other western allies will be in full flow and the initial advantage of the Teutons will have completely passed. The resistance which the Italians have made against the very best which the Germans have been able to send against them gives us an excellent reason to hope that the situation in the next three weeks will not be materially changed.



Desperate Italian resistance in the mountains has thwarted, according to the latest news available, the attempts of the Austrians and Germans to smash through to the plains and thus force an Italian retreat from the Piave.

The operations in Asia continue to be of absorbing interest. Although the force in Mesopotamia, following the much-to-be-regretted death of General Maude, has been quiet, that of General Allenby in Palestine has had continued successes. Jerusalem is practically surrounded, and its evacuation by the Turks at any moment would not be a surprise. German influence in Syria and the Turkish influence throughout Asia Minor is in the balance, and, if Jerusalem falls, will receive a severe blow. The two British forces—in Mesopotamia and in Palestine—are, it is true, widely separated and, to the casual observer, have little in common. Yet, as a matter of fact, there is a close and distinct relation between them. In the first place it is perfectly obvious that the Turkish resistance, wherever the British are operating, is crumbling. There appears to be a complete inability to offer any sustained and effective opposition to the British advance. If the British can take Jerusalem, with all of its advantages of terrain and rail communication with the sea, there is a strong possibility of their being also able to continue the northward march.

Several weeks ago the British official mouthpiece, General Maurice, stated that the Germans were concentrating large force at Aleppo for a drive against Bagdad. It is known that this situation has been viewed by the British with no little anxiety and concern. The British force before Bagdad is not small; indeed it is large and formidable. The same is true of the force in Palestine, although it is believed to be much smaller than the other, and probably is. Nevertheless, either force, as far as numbers are concerned, is probably capable of matching anything that may be sent against it.

Let us suppose that the Germans begin a march toward Bagdad. The single and vital line of supply is down the valley of the Tigris via Mosul. Let us suppose that the British Palestine forces are marching northward against this line. Before the Germans could reach Mosul, or in fact get any where near it, General Allenby's troops would in all probability be thrown directly across this line and would thwart the entire German campaign.

On the other hand, having secured Jerusalem, the Palestine troops would be practically safe against an attack. If the Germans made such an effort, the British in Mesopotamia would advance to Mosul, and the great Turkish base would fall into their hands, destroying the power of the Turkish Army in all of Western Asia from the Taurus Mountains to the Persian frontier. The Germans are, therefore, as a result of the Palestine successes, on the horns of a dilemma. The probabilities are that they will stand where they are and attempt no move either way.

NEWS AND NOTES OF THE MUSICAL WORLD

Fritz Krcisler in a Statement of Great Frankness Tells of His Conduct in War.

FRITZ KREISLER has issued a remarkable address to the American people, a document that might be described as the semi-official "White Paper" of an artist's life in America in wartime. Put forward originally in Pittsburgh, where the Director of Public Safety canceled a concert by the Austrian violinist owing to conditions involving the entire musical community there, the statement says that Kreisler has obeyed "in letter and in spirit" this country's laws. He has given no aid to Austria, has sent no money to his fatherland since the United States Government declared war on Germany—which it has not as yet done against Austria, by the way—and, finally, the bulk of Kreisler's earnings in America, where he perhaps is the highest paid artist subject of one of the so-called Central Powers either on the concert or opera stage, has been contributed for the support of dependents of allied prisoners and of artists from allied nations left stranded by the war.

Mr. Kreisler's letter is in English, which he speaks as one who has spent most of his career in America since childhood, and is as follows:

Statement from Fritz Kreisler.

There have been continuous statements in Pittsburgh papers designed to prejudice and arouse public opinion against me. It has been said that I am an Austrian officer on furlough and that my funds were sent abroad to give comfort to enemy arms. In this morning's papers these statements are intensified by positive and violent accusations to that effect.

These statements are utterly baseless and untrue.

I am not on furlough here. At the outbreak of the war in July, 1914, I served for six weeks as a reserve officer of the Austrian army on the Russian front and after receiving a wound was pronounced an invalid and honorably discharged from any further service. There has been no attempt whatever by my Government to recall me into service.

It is true that I sent money to Austria.

I have sent a small monthly allowance to my father, a medical doctor and Professor of Zoology, who had lost everything during the Russian invasion of Austrian territory in October, 1914, and has been prevented by a subsequent paralytic stroke from exercising his profession. He is 74 years old.

I have sent monthly allowances to the orphan children of some artists, personal friends of mine who fell in the war.

In fulfillment of a pledge undertaken by my wife, at the deathbed of some Russian and Serbian wounded prisoners whom she nursed during my stay at the front, I have sent eleven individual monthly allowances to their destitute orphans in Russia and Serbia through the medium of the Red Cross in Berne, Switzerland.

The bulk of my earnings, however, has gone to the Brotherhood of Artists, founded by me for the purpose of extending help to stranded artists and their dependents regardless of their nationality. For fully three years my contributions were the sole and unique support of seventeen British, Russian, French, and Italian artists and their entire families who found themselves stranded and utterly destitute in Austria at the outbreak of the war.

I have been bitterly and violently attacked by Chauvinists in Vienna for diverting my earnings to that channel. On the other hand, I am in honor bound to state that I have never been rebuked for my actions by any official of my Government.

I have not sent a penny to Austria since the entrance of the United States in the war, and I have not had a word from abroad for fully eight months.

The ironical aspect of the situation is that some three-score of British, French, Russian, and Italian children may now be actually dying of want because I, technically their enemy, am prevented by the laws of this country, their friend and ally, from saving them.

During every minute of my three years' stay in this country I have been conscious of my duty to it in return for its hospitality. I have obeyed its laws in letter and in spirit, and I have not done anything that might be construed in the least as being detrimental to it. Not a penny of my earnings has ever, nor will it ever, contribute to the purchase of rifles and ammunition, no matter where and in whatsoever cause. The violent political issues over the world have not for an instant beclouded my fervent belief in true art as the dead centre of all passions and strife, as the sublime God-inspired leveler of things, as the ultimate pacifier, rehumanizer, and rebuilder of destroyed bridges of understanding between nations.

It is to the cause of crystallising and purifying this true vocation of art and to the preservation and marshaling of its forces, the priesthood of artists all over the world, against the coming day of their mission, that every penny of my earnings has been and shall be devoted as long as I shall be permitted to exercise my profession. No sordid consideration of my material welfare enters for a moment into my mind. After four years' successful tour of this country, I have less money to my name than many a prosperous bank clerk. I have no personal interests at stake. I shall serve the cause I am devoted to undismayed by personal attacks as long as I shall be permitted to and so long as the deep sentiment and feeling I bear this country will not be thrown into conflict with the fundamental and unalterable principles of my honor as a man and artist. I make no appeal for sympathy, but for justice and respect.

But come what may, my deep gratitude for past kindness, hospitality, and love shown me by the American public will be forever engraved in my heart.

Nov. 7, 1917. FRITZ KREISLER.

A MUSICIAN'S LETTER.

Alberto Jonas, Pianist, Appeals to America's Fair Play.

Alberto Jonás, pianist, of this city, has addressed an open letter to the Presidents and directors of musical clubs and societies, in which he says in part:

"The newspapers have announced recently that in a few small communities the musical clubs which had engaged Fritz Kreisler have canceled his engagement on the ground of patriotism.

"The contention has been made that Kreisler is an Austrian, has served as an officer in the trenches, and that the money which he is earning here goes to Austria.

"I doubt whether the last assertion has been made after due reflection. Ever since Fritz Kreisler left Europe and came to America, three years ago, he has lived in this country. His sympathies and love for America, during the eighteen years that he has been personally known to Americans, have never been questioned. He has married in America, and his wife is an American.

"As to his having been an Austrian officer, would you condemn him because, laying aside his beloved violin, when his country called, he responded, quietly, simply, and fought in the trenches until wounded? America has always acclaimed Kreisler as one of the greatest violinists, but when he returned to this country wounded, and limped onto the concert stage, the whole American people cheered him for his manly, simple, unostentatious behavior.

"Remember that he fought in the trenches, with his American wife as nurse in the army, when America was at peace with Germany. How could he be made to suffer now, for what Americans deemed right then?

"To deny Fritz Kreisler the right to appear in concert in America would be the greatest injustice to this incomparable master of the violin. It would be an irretrievable loss to us, to America. It would mean to drive him away, not only now, but perhaps forever. I sincerely hope and pray that you will not sanction the hastily and ill-judged impulse of a few communities.

"I am a Spaniard and, therefore, neutral. I have lived fifteen years in America, and am happy and proud to think that I have contributed, to the best of my ability, to the musical advancement of this country.

"I make this appeal, unknown to Mr. Kreisler, or to any of his friends. I make it for our sake, for the sake of all who love music and who have learned to love this country and are mindful of its welfare and good name.

"I make it in the firm conviction that you will redress an incipient wrong and uphold America's reputation for honesty, fairness, and justice.

"ALBERTO JONAS."

WAGNER AND GERMANY.

Was Not the Composer Himself Once Rejected by His Fatherland?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

This seems an opportune time to hear what Wagner has to say about the German vibrations as he conceived them, (musically.) In the "Life of Wagner," by W. J. Henderson, we find on Page 47 this: "When the score of the 'Dutchman' was completed, he hastened to send it to his Fatherland, but from Munich and Leipsic came the answer that it was not suitable for Germany." "Fool that I was," he says. "I had fancied that it was fitted for Germany alone, since it struck chords that can only vibrate in the German breast."

While his work did not at that time find acceptance in Germany, it was the hope and expectation of Wagner to do so, as he no doubt believed he knew the German chords. Now, did he, or did he not? Are we the ones who vibrate to his music, are we the proxy of Germany? Or are we unthinking as to the value of music in our experiences, not taking thought as to its significant influence?

STARVE OUT MUSIC.

Better That Than to Excite American Antagonism Now.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mrs. F. H. Potter is right when she says, "Let us, if necessary, starve for music in this country until our war is ended."

She refers to German music, played and directed by Germans at present. Imagine an American leading American music, played by American musicians, in Berlin at present. The Prussian arrogance can't see the point. I am a born German and a musician and I can sympathize with the American lovers of music when they are forced to listen to music under those influences. The morals of the German Government, and, I am sorry to say, also of the German people, have proved to stand so low that it is simply impossible to listen at present to German music without the most irritating feelings. Fortunately, American culture is strong enough not to show it in public. But it might be better not to excite it too much.

EDWARD MAYERHOFER.

Yonkers, Nov. 2, 1917.

SINGERS TO BLAME.

Some Artists Unwise in Their Former Zeal for Germany.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There were several letters in last Sunday's TIMES, written by various music lovers, bemoaning the fate of the German opera at the Metropolitan. It seems a pity that the music must go, but no one mentioned the German singers who would necessarily sing if the Wagnerian operas were retained this year. What loyal American would want to listen to a group of men and women who, if they had the opportunity, would do all in their power to help our enemies? What true-hearted American would applaud them?

We all know that great art belongs to the civilized world, but it seems a shame that it should have to be interpreted by singers whose zeal for the Fatherland is well known.

MARIAN STOUTENBURGH.

New York, Nov. 13, 1917.

WHERE GENIUS FLOWERS.

National Lines Have Not Barred the Germans in Concert Halls.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If we would but try to weigh the momentous question of German opera, and of all musical works by German masters, in a sane manner, without allowing the hysteria of the present day to hold away over our powers of logical reasoning, we would surely all admit that genius is, after all, a gift of God, whether bestowed upon a mortal in one country or another, and we would hold to the well-known saying that "A thing of beauty is a joy forever"—all the more so in darkest hours of war.

It is a consolation to know that thus far the Museum of Art has not yet relegated all its master works by German artists to the garret, to await there the end of this unfortunate war.

PRESIDENT OF MUSIC LOVERS' CLUB.

New York, Nov. 16, 1917.

REPLIES TO MR. SKINNER.

Italian Holds German Opera Ban in the Balance with Venice.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In answer to the questions put to you in a letter by Ernest M. Skinner of Boston, regarding the decision of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York, and of the Chicago Opera Company, not to present German operas this season, I wish to tell Mr. Skinner that we are not, as he says, at all childish, but rather manly. What matters it if we hear German opera or not? Is it necessary to wail over such a small matter when our boys are actually fighting the Germans?

He suggests as a suitable headline, "America Throws Wagner, Bach, Goethe, Rembrandt, and Martin Luther in the Ash Barrel—Evangelical Churches May Close Until War Is Over—Military Necessity the Cause." I am not afraid to say that this will "suit us to a T." We have had too much of that stuff, and it is about time that the world should wake up to the fact. The world will not quiver a bit if the works of the men whom Mr. Skinner, in his great earnestness, puts in front of us should cease to exist.

What is the use of writing fervent and heated letters about the temporary suspension of German operas, when the Germans have no scruples at all in destroying forever such artistic masterpieces as the Cathedrals of Laon and Rheims and the historic Chateaux of Champagne and Belgium, and the beautiful—God forbid the crime!—Venice, if these barbarians of the twentieth century can get it?

OSCAR SEAGLE RETURNS.

T. Burleigh, which he knew as a boy at his home in the South. A second group, from Dvorak, he believes to be timely "at a moment when the world is stirring to understand the Slavic peoples," while a third or patriotic group has an air from the opera, "Patrie," by Paladilhe, and "La Bas," by Fourdrain, suggesting the war spirit in Belgium and Alsace.

NEW TO THE FLONZALEYS.

The Flonzaley Quartet, for the first time without one of its members, Ugo Ara, who has joined the ambulance service of Italy in the war, will this week present a new viola player in his place, Louis Bailly, long associated with the orchestra of the Paris Conservatoire. The Flonzaleys met Mr. Bailly when he was the viola of the Geloso Quartet, and he had toured Europe for six years with the Capet Quartet, of which he was a founder. He took first prize of the Conservatoire in 1899 both for violin and viola. Mr. Bailly brought with him to America letters from Chevillard, Dubois, Widor, Bruneau, and some interesting new French music, including a sonata for violin and piano by Paul Paray, now a prisoner in Germany.

CHILDREN IN ORATORIO.

Their Voices for Pierne "Crusade" Around the World.

Gabriel Pierne's "The Children's Crusade," will enlist a special chorus of children, trained by Frank R. Rix, Superintendent of Music in New York's public schools, at a coming revival of the cantata by the Oratorio Society on Dec. 5 at Carnegie Hall. Walter Damrosch's soloists include Marie Sundelius of the Metropolitan and Florence Macbeth.

The first performance of this music in America was given Dec. 4, 1908, by the same society, then under Frank Damrosch. A repetition now in wartime is deemed appropriate, as the theme is a mediaeval Flemish legend of the time of the Crusades, when a thousand children were said to have marched from the Lowlands in order to sail for Jerusalem and wrest the Holy Sepulchre from the infidels.

The composer wrote after the earlier performance of his music in New York, of which he was informed by cable, that he was deeply moved at the thought that his work was even better appreciated in America than it had been on its first production in France. He sent his cordial congratulations to everybody concerned in conquering the difficulties of the "Crusade," and he added:

"Embrace, for me, all your dear little children. Would they send me their pictures—a postcard? I assure you that I have already a precious collection. I am working again for them, and in April will give at Amsterdam the first performance of an oratorio written exclusively for children.

"I see with joy that the children of America are able to compete with the school children of Paris, those of Holland, of Germany, and of Switzerland.

"GABRIEL PIERNE."

SOLDIERS SINGING IN ARMY CAMPS

Gen. Bell Aids in $100,000 Fund for a Hall at Camp Upton—Leaders at Work on Christmas Plans.

General J. Franklin Bell is honorary Chairman of a committee to raise $100,000 for an assembly hall to be used by soldiers of the enrolled army at Yaphank, L. I., already the "fifty-second largest city" in the United States and as yet without a shelter for its patriotic song rallies and public meetings. Among the committee's officers are also Mrs. Joseph K. Choate, W. K. Brice, M. Morgenthau, Jr., and Mrs. George P. Robbins, while other members are Grosvenor Atterbury, Harry Barnhart, Stowe Phelps, Mrs. Robert C. Black, Mrs. Irving T. Bush, Mrs. H. C. Coe, Miss Mary Eno, Mrs. Walter Lewisohn, Mrs. Howard Mansfield, Mrs. S. S. Norton, Mrs. W. S. Nelson, Mrs. Frank B. Rowell, Mrs. Schirmer, Mrs. E. K. Wickes, Miss Margaret Seligman, and Mrs. J. F. Yawger.

"On behalf of the men of New York assembled under my command," said General Bell, "I make an appeal to the citizens of New York City. We want to have a place where we can talk to these soldiers and not have to make the same talk too often. I am expecting to ask Colonel Roosevelt, Governor Whitman, Mayor Mitchel, and other men to come down to our camp and address the soldiers. I would not have the nerve to ask them to talk fifteen times and say the same thing in order to reach everyone.

"At Camp Upton the biggest auditorium which is not yet finished will hold 3,000 people only. That is the hall of the Y. M. C. A. We have 44,000 men, and if all these men wanted to get into that auditorium and if it was open once a day it would take two weeks for each man to get a turn. Now we are also ambitious to have a place where Harry Barnhart, our camp song leader, can exercise his talents as a leader of mass singing.

"I want a building which will hold at least 10,000. I would like it big enough to hold 12,000, because I would like to be able to reach all of the men in not more than four meetings. I need this building so badly that I am willing to call on the men themselves to contribute not over $1 each, and if they do we will have $45,000 to start the Community Hall. I am sure that the citizens of New York will assist us."

In several of the National Army cantonments similar plans are under way for the erection of large community halls, with a seating capacity of from 5,000 to 10,000 persons. In addition to providing warm shelter in Winter for mass singing and lectures, these community halls will be used for general instruction and for the concerts to be given by famous artists.

There are no Government funds available for these structures, but the camp authorities, together with the citizens of adjoining communities, are raising the necessary money for this purpose. The plan at Camp Upton to ask every soldier for a small contribution will insure personal interest and a feeling of partnership among the men who will be directly benefited.

The Government theatres authorized in many of the National Army camps will, it is expected, be ready for use early in December. This type of building, designed primarily for dramatic entertainment, will also serve as a valuable adjunct to the singing activities, as it will be available for such use during the day, and there will be opportunity for singing preceding the evening program.

A great number of soldiers and sailors are in New York each week, not only the men from Camp Upton who have week-end leave, but others at home on furlough and men of the Entente Allies whose orders call them here. It is the plan of the New York Community Chorus to make its Sunday evening sings at the Seventy-first Regiment Armory an occasion where the men in service and civilians, too, can join in the songs of the allied armies.

When the draft was made it was declared that fully 25 per cent. of the men called to service could not speak English, and this fact induced Harry Barnhart to give the greater portion of his time, when not engaged in the singing activities at Camp Upton, to promoting Americanization work. At present Mr. Barnhart has begun rehearsing for the annual "Tree of Light" in New York and for a Christmas rally at Camp Upton.

The problems of a song leader in a camp of from 30,000 to 45,000 men are numerous, the principal one being lack of time to get around to all the regiments without the humble but necessary "flivver" car. Stetson Humphrey, song leader at Camp Dix, Wrightstown, N. J., surmounted the difficulty by training a quartet in each company. These quartets, called together by the general leader to learn new songs, teach them in turn to the men of their companies and lead the singing at mess time or in barracks.

"When I took the men at the Norfolk Navy Yard for their first sing the dentist had been ministering to them all morning, the doctors had been at work with their serums, and the chaplain had just been giving them a serious talk on the responsibilities of their new job," wrote Jerome Swinford, song leader at Norfolk, Va. "I wondered if I could ever bring back to normal all those woeful countenances. Ten minutes later the miracle had been wrought, but not by me. It was the songs that did the trick."

A "khaki minstrel show" was started by David Griffin, leader at Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. C., for his men to give in public during State Fair week. Instead of the conventional setting the minstrels were to do their singing and tell their stories in uniform, grouped about a tent. When one of the regular negro battalions was due to leave for New York the Colonel said he was going to keep them singing as they marched into the city. "So if you hear 'Tipperary' better sung than you ever heard it before," wrote Mr. Griffin, "you will know it's my men."

"Bare" singing is a new word that sounds, to be sure, like some of the newer aesthetic dance forms, but this is merely camouflage for "a capella." The shorter expression was coined by Augustus D. Zanzig, song leader at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, O., to describe conditions when the song leader is sans band, sans cornetist, or any other form of musical accompaniment," and must depend on his unaided efforts to evoke "live singing" from several thousand men.

The folks "back home" are helping. Out in Missoula, Mon., Mr. and Mrs. Martin J. Hutchens have organized a community chorus with a membership of 2,000 persons. The movement promises to become Statewide, and already has the active support of the local Association of Commerce. Musicians of Washington State have established what they call a Liberty Chorus at Seattle.

Every regiment at Camp Lewis, American Lake, Wash., has its own piano. R. Festyn Davies, representing the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, having taken the responsibility of purchasing a dozen instruments. A glee club is also to be started in each company, with a man chosen from the ranks as leader. Mr. Davies is training a chorus of soldiers to take part in Tacoma's "Tree of Light."

The long stride that the War Department has taken in recognizing the value of music is summed up in a recent statement by Major Gen. Greene, commander at Camp Lewis. "They did not teach us to sing in the old days when I was learning to be a soldier," said he, "but we sang anyway. Now the army has added this new branch, and we expect it will give the men a great deal of happiness and inspiration."

"It is just as essential that soldiers know how to sing as it is that they carry rifles and learn to shoot," said Major Gen. Leonard Wood in a talk to his command at Camp Funston, Fort Riley, Kan. "This sounds odd to the ordinary person, because the layman cannot reconcile singing with killing. But there isn't anything in the world—even letters from home—that will raise a soldier's spirits like a good, catchy, marching tune."

IN AND ABOUT THE NEW YORK THEATRES

THE REAL GEORGE SAND

By JOHN CORBIN.

WHO reads George Sand any more!" sneered a modernistic Frenchman. Happily for Mrs. Fiske and her dramatist, Philip Moeller, our playgoing populace have never read her—or, indeed, much of anything. If they had, there would be less vogue for this "biographical comedy," laughable as it is in some respects, and brilliantly as Mrs. Fiske projects for us the character as she and her author conceive it.

The real George Sand? The phrase has a nerve-grating sound, shrill with insistence that human nature, being fashioned out of mud, must not be remembered in marble. No claim will here be made of arriving at the ultimate truth. In the case of George Sand that would be self-evident quackery.

Were her kaleidoscopic scandals the result of maternal or of erotic impulses? Was she a pathfinder for the human soul or a scribbler of chromo-lithographic fiction for nursemaids? Many have declared on both sides, but who shall decide? Perhaps she was a combination of warring elements. James Huneker in his study of Chopin calls her "a maternal nymphomaniac, a metaphysical Messalina," and he lately reverted to the phrase in his brilliant and stimulating essay in "Unicorns." But he has not yet paused to consider by what strange chemistry of the heart nymphomania became tinctured with the mother spirit, by what marvelous catalysis the sultry brain of Messalina paled to a metaphysical twilight.

After almost a century of incessant scribbling about her, George Sand remains a sphinx, half feline animality, half serene and noble womanhood. And the riddle of her darkling mind is unanswered. Only this is clear, that her life had a vivid reality and power which have never for a moment ceased to fascinate the world while they baffle it; that, whether as novelist or as social reformer, she created currents in the stream of human progress which have not yet spent their force. As René Doumic has pointed out, the revolted female who found her completer expression in Ibsen was first broached by George Sand upon the astonished world of the early 1830's.

What an opportunity is here for Mrs. Fiske, the archpriestess of Ibsen among us, the intellectual leader of our otherwise philistine stage! What a dramatic treasure-trove for Philip Moeller, proud product of Washington Square, exponent to the nth degree of unfettered art, of enfranchised intelligence! Now at last our native drama, released from the double shackles of dull prudery and sordid profit, has its opportunity to step forth and show us something of the workings of sex in its relation to character and to genius. It remains an opportunity unembraced. Counsel the Scriptures: "Let him that is on the housetop not come down." But as the puritan minister read the passage it was a counsel of discreet humility, and he preached a sermon upon the text: Top-knot, come down! "Madame Sand" is a production without panache.

The play begins at the elopement to Venice with Alfred de Musset; it proceeds in the second act to George's sidestep into the arms of Dr. Pagello—while their patient-lover is in the very room, drugged as they think to oblivion. And it ends with her kidnapping of Chopin. The amours with Jules Sandeau and Prosper Mérimée happened before the play opens, and those with Michel de Bourges, Félicien Mallefille, and Pierre Leroux are elided between acts two and three; but enough remains, surely, to give us, with at least an attempt at truth, George's nympho-maternal genius—or whatever it may have been.

To do this, however, would be to attempt a comedy of character, and one which, it must be said, offers difficulties as great as its opportunities. And whatever the result artistically, it would probably repel the vast populace who judge of propriety in the theatre not by the treatment and the tendency of a play but by its subject. The course which Mr. Moeller and Mrs. Fiske actually pursue could not be more successful in avoiding popular prejudice if it were inspired by the genius of the box office. George Sand and Alfred de Musset are presented not at all as vital human beings, let alone transcendent artists, but as heartless and vapid puppets in a ceaseless artistic pose. The result is not character but caricature, not comedy or even farce, but burlesque. The free-loving couple in Lawrence Langner's "Another Way Out" are no more preposterously exaggerated, no more soulless and insignificant. They are, in fact, infinitely more significant, for beneath the surface gayety and irresponsibility of the piece there is, for those who care to take it, a highly intelligent if cynical comment on human nature and social institutions. These puppets labeled Sand and Musset are as trivial as any artistic posers in Washington Square—and beyond that they are nothing.

How is that matter of the heroine's true character sidestepped? By the farce tempo in which the scenes are played, the grotesque manner in which they are spoken. When Mme. de Musset is attempting to save her son from the Venetian elopement, in order to preserve her influence over him, George pleads: "I will be a mother to him. A mother and a mistress. That combination is unique, Madame—unique, but none the less sublime!" In saying this Mrs. Fiske gives a stroke of the caricaturist's pencil that convulses the audience. Every question of character and motive, even that most ticklish question of propriety, is lost in laughter.

To impute any motive of thrift in all this would doubtless be unjust. When Mr. Moeller has been most successful hitherto it has been in frank burlesques that anticipated the manner, and many of the absurd effects, of "Madame Sand." His Bacon and his Shakespeare plagiarized their own conversation, recording it in notebooks like a stage reporter, precisely as do his George Sand and Alfred de Musset. Shaw's Shakespeare also indulges us with this jape. And Mrs. Fiske's abrupt, staccato methods tend naturally toward caricature. Our present purpose is only to define—to record in short that we have here not one of those searching embodiments of human impulse, those tense and luminous characterizations that have made Mrs. Fiske unique among artists, but a mere buffoonery, however adroit and laughable.

And the play is laughable, at least for a time. Mr. Moeller's inspiration in burlesque is as novel as it is effective. And his wit has not only the touch of intelligence, the feeling for phrase, but a remarkable instinct for effect in the theatre. In his old age Jules Sandeau heard of George's lament that her heart was a cemetery. Dryly, and not without venom, he commented: "I would call it rather a necropolis." The point is obvious, though the actual meaning of the two words is the same. Mr. Moeller makes George lament that her heart is "a grave," and, giving the retort to Heine, amends it thus: "Don't you mean a cemetery?" The thrust has an added point—and the words are both familiar to the least literary playgoer. Again: To de Musset's intermittent energy George's tireless industry was a reproach, as her ceaseless flow of unpremeditated copy was an offense to his exquisite literary taste and his finely conscious instincts as an artist. He said of her: "She writes as a cow gives milk!" Mr. Moeller uses the phrase and adds: "All she's got to do is to jerk her mind." It is the stroke of a born caricaturist. It adds nothing to the idea and perhaps detracts from it, but it is highly effective theatrically.

Mrs. Fiske's performance, though addressed to no finer perceptions, is in its kind masterly. Her makeup is swarthily Mediterranean and her whole plastique suggests smoldering physical passions and a stable, untroubled mentality. She wears her trousers with sublime unconsciousness and smokes her black cigars as if used to them from the cradle. Personally I shall never believe that they are made by the property man and filled with cigarette tobacco. To the casual glance she is George Sand; and, for an act or so, she is an unalloyed delight.

In the theatre, however, mere caricature palls even the best. The ultimate penalty of dodging reality in character and vital themes in comedy is that interest in the situations, even attention to the story, becomes impossible. We see George wooing three men and discarding two of them, but always with the same mock fervor, the same mock tragedy of lamentation. Repetition is often a source of comic effect, but only when it springs from some insistent impulse that is recognizably human. The heart of this George is not so much a necropolis as a mocking jumble of cenotaphs.

Mr. Moeller's failure to make a three-act play bears a curious resemblance to Mr. Langner's in "The Family Exit." Both had an admirable theme of one-act comedy, and, instead of delving deeper into its realities, rising higher in rhythmic structure, both sought to hold attention by mere iteration.

The Comedy of Sand and de Musset.

Sincerely faced, the story of Sand and de Musset is comedy of the truest—comedy that, for all its surface laughter, reaches upward to the stars, downward to the pure source of tears. Beyond question their affair was in a measure modeled upon the bookish, "romantic" fashion of their day, and beyond question it was intended in turn to furnish them both with copy for further literature—perhaps even to advertise to the world the coming output. But that both were shaken to the depths is as evident as that they were ultimately raised to the heights—at least de Musset.

Mr. Moeller lightly ignores the motive of George's sudden infatuation for Pagello, or at best assumes that it also was "maternal." The truth, as it seems, is far different. George Sand had a sinister ancestry. Her great-great-grandfather on her father's side was the Elector of Saxony, "the most amazing debauchée" of his time, and her great-great-grandmother was the celebrated courtesan Aurora von Königsmarck. Their son was Maréchal de Saxe, victor of Fontenoy; and the great soldier's mate was an actress-courtesan, Marie Rinteau. Their child, George's grandmother, married an aging libertine. George's father was true to type. He married a month before George's birth, and his wife was not only a woman of the people, "small, dark, fiery, and violent," but an actress-courtesan, who continued her profession after George had grown up.

The mind of our heroine is thought to have derived from her nobler ancestors, her physique and temperament from her plebeian mother. But her morals came from both sides. That, as Geneticists tell us, means a redoubled, inescapable inheritance. An astonishing number of her affairs were with men of genius who appealed to what was best in her and developed it. But this was not always the case. The census of her lovers will doubtless never be complete, but we know that it included many nonentities.

Pagello's handsome face and his Italian manners no doubt invested him with a glamour of the fashionable "romance." But in mind he was dull and commonplace. The ugly fact seems to be that because de Musset was petulant, dissipated, and, above all, ill—it was probably delirium tremens—George Sand followed the impulse of her baser, more powerful inheritance. That is how "maternal" she was. The situation brims with laughter for gods and little fishes. Having left Paris with a fragile poet of genius, amid a fanfare of romantic trumpeting, she suddenly popped up again with a strapping specialist in gallstones. The return of the discarded poet, the fragile aristocrat, is also subject for comedy—the comedy of disillusionment. But there was a very deep and human side to the affair, for all concerned—a side which Mr. Moeller not merely omits but crudely falsifies.

For in her heart George still loved de Musset; and his frantic dissipations no doubt made her maternally solicitous, as are all generous women when they love. Having sent Pagello packing, she managed to renew the former affair for a time; and when de Musset's pride and his manhood again asserted themselves she laid regular siege to him. She cut off her hair and sent it to him. He wept over the gift, but did not yield. Then she went abroad in the world loudly proclaiming her heartbreak. Here is the journal of one day's pilgrimage in grief, written in the fond hope that some day he would read it.

"Liszt told me this evening that only God was worthy to be loved. It may be so, but it is very difficult to love God when one is so in love with a man. . . . I saw Heine this morning. He told me that one only loved with the head and the senses, and that the heart had very little to do with the matter. At 2 o'clock I saw Mme. Allart. She told me that one must be cunning with men, and pretend to be angry in order to win them back. Saint-Beuve was the only one who did not hurt my feelings and did not say something silly. I asked him what love was, and he replied: 'Love resides in tears. You weep, and therefore you love.' Ah yes, my poor friend, I love! It is in vain that I call anger to my aid. I love and shall die of love unless God performs a miracle. . . . I must go and see Sister Martha."

It is infinitely ridiculous—Parisian to the core. But it is also very human, and touching, too, in its way.

De Musset's comedy was more deeply tinged with heartbreak, and his was the eventual triumph. Beyond question this was the one real passion of his life, pervading all his subsequent years in ever-changing mood, as did Dante's passion for Beatrice. The de Musset of Venice might have become anything. He was only 23. This woman of 29, whom Mr. Moeller seeks to present to us as maternal, flaunted a gross infidelity before his fevered eyes, and to enjoy it to the full sent him back to face the jeers of literary Paris. He accepted the fate with a touching humility, an effort to make the best of it, which, while essentially comic, had rare elements of nobility. He vowed a triune friendship to eternity and they took hands on it. But from that moment his faith in life, and in the love of woman, was shattered. He plunged deeper than ever in debauchery, his young genius clouded by pessimism. But the effort which it cost him to resist George Sand's renewed advances gave his spirit its finest temper and raised his poetry to its pinnacle—not the loftiest, perhaps, but as clear and as unapproached as that of Molière.

Let any one who doubts the depth of his suffering and the purity of his triumph read the whole of the "Souvenir" of 1841, written eight years after the Venice episode. Three stanzas will suffice to outline the reality of his "biographical comedy:"

J'ai vu ma seule amie, a jamais la plus chère,
Devenu elle-même un sépulchre blanchi,
Une tombe vivante ou flottait la poussière
De notre mort chèri.

De notre pauvre amour, que, dans la nuit profonde,
Nous avions sur nos coeurs si doucement bercé!
C'était plus qu'une vie, hélas! c'était un monde
Que s'était effacé.

. . . . . .

Je me dis seulement: "A cette heure, en ce lieu,
Un jour, je fus aimé, j'aimais, elle était belle.
J'enfouis ce trésor dans mon âme immortelle,
Et je l'emporte à Dieu!"

But, as we were saying, nobody reads anything any more, and it is perhaps as well, if one is to enjoy our theatre.

Miss George, at the Playhouse, Is Giving New York Its Closest Approach to a Permanent Repertoire Theatre. Her Performance in Bernstein's "L'Elevation" Has Been Hailed as One of the Finest in Her Career.

THE THEATRICAL FAMINE

THE last week brought with it no betterment of theatrical conditions in New York City and throughout the country, and the belief is now general that the theatre is embarking upon a period of real famine. To discuss New York only for the moment, attendance in the theatres for the last four or five weeks undoubtedly sets a new low mark for a number of years past. In many instances the gross receipts for attractions of more or less established reputation have been almost unbelievably low. As for the attractions of lesser repute, the box office reports of the theatres housing such pieces are indeed becoming tragic records. Three weeks ago mention was made in these columns of an unsual instance where the war tax on passes actually exceeded the gross receipts, but today this is a happening of such frequence as to draw forth hardly a remark. It is perhaps betraying no confidence, now that the show in question has folded its tent and departed, to make known that the total gross receipts for the two Wednesday performances of "Romance and Arabella" during its final week at the Harris Theatre, were in the neighborhood of $80.

It is safe to add also that there is no play in town, whatever the measure of its success, which has not been affected in some way by the current depression. This does not mean that there are no houses in the city enjoying capacity business—there are several—but even in the case of the greatest of all hits the ticket brokers have found themselves with unsold tickets on their hands as certain time approached, and these have been returned to the theatre and sold at the box office. The result of all this, of course, has been to make the ticket brokers more wary than ever, and it is certain that the agencies will make no "buys" (long-term contracts for tickets) until business is once more on a normal footing. Expiring contracts for tickets have in no case been renewed. Something like seventeen of these buys were in force a few weeks ago, but the week to come will see only five in effect.

There remain twelve attractions which have not yet been offered over the cut-rate counters, but in many instances this is due rather to an unwillingness on the part of the management to sell tickets at cut rates than to any overwhelming demand for tickets at the box-office rates. The cry for more theatres, which was sounded so loudly last season that ground was broken for eight or ten new playhouses, will, if present conditions continue, soon be replaced by a cry for more shows. Whereas it was formerly customary for a play desiring a theatre to guarantee the management of the house a stated amount a week, Variety, the weekly organ of the profession, is looking forward to the time when the owners of theatres will offer guarantees to attractions to induce them to play in their houses.

It is estimated that about 20 per cent. of the touring companies have been called in, for the present depression is nation wide. Road conditions have been aggravated by transportation difficulties, which frequently make it impossible for a show playing one-night stands to reach more than four towns in a week.

UP AND DOWN BROADWAY

INASMUCH as something more than a month has passed since the publication of a Shavian letter in these pages, the silence is herewith broken. Strangely enough, the letter is the only missive received by Faversham from Shaw since the production of "Misalliance," although that piece has meanwhile run its course and betaken itself to Brooklyn. Wrote G. B. S.:

"Dear Mr. Faversham: I have sent the agreement for the production of 'Misalliance' to my New York lawyer, who will exchange copies with you as usual. I should have sent it sooner, but I have been in Ireland for some time, much preoccupied with political business; and as everything seems to go smoothly and successfully in your hands, I have placed you on my list of those whose business may be safely neglected. However, I apologize for my remissness, as if I dropped dead you would be without your contract. You see, I am businesslike enough to be aware of my duty, but not morally energetic enough to do it punctually.

"Tell Mr. Philip Leigh not to forget that Bentley is the real hero of the play, though that fact is hardly given away until his last line.

"Send me a program if you can spare one. I hope you haven't announced it as a play in three acts this time. You can get about six lines longer notice and a few tons of extra gabble in mouth-to-mouth discussion by insisting on the fact that the play is in form a Greek play with all the unities preserved.

"I have seen but one notice of 'Misalliance,' but am told by correspondents that you are having a success. This is welcome news. I consider Tarleton, next to Falstaff, the best part of its kind in the English drama, but its full flavor only comes out on the stage.

"Ever, G. BERNARD SHAW."

The Shaw contracts, incidentally, are weighty ones. They are always especially printed on parchment, and contain clauses covering every possible emergency. The notices to which the author makes reference were duly sent immediately after the première here, but apparently were lost—as was also the program, the shortage of which Shaw appears to attribute to the enormous press of people intent upon seeing "Misalliance."

There is a rather definite report on the Great White (from 7:45 to 11) Way that Ethel Barrymore's production of "Camille" is likely to come as a surprise to those persons who treasure that piece in the memory. Miss Barrymore, it is reported, will use a somewhat amended edition of the piece, the changes having been wrought by Edward Sheldon. The period of the piece is unaltered, but it has been modernized structurally. Among other things, Sheldon, after the dramatic fashion set by "On Trial," has added a prologue which shows the sale of the effects of the heroine immediately after her death.

Another play is about to undergo a change of title without interference with the other mechanism of a New York run. "Losing Eloise," at the Harris, is in the act of becoming "The Naughty Wife," and unless unforeseen contingencies arise the transformation should be complete in about a week.

The myth of the value of a New York indorsement for road purposes vanishes completely in the face of what is happening in the provinces to "Mary's Ankle," "Cheating Cheaters," and "The Thirteenth Chair." The last two, both all-season successes in New York, are meeting with slim patronage. The first, which lingered about two months at the Bijou, is enjoying almost capacity attendance. One of the greatest surprises of the season in theatrical circles, incidentally, is the failure of "The Thirteenth Chair" on the road. In London, where it was lately produced, it is highly successful.

Another conquest is to be recorded for "The Man Who Stayed Home," a war play which William A. Brady brought to these shores early in 1915 under the title of "The White Feather," and which up to recently never had made anything more than an average impression on the American populace. The Boston run of the piece, lately commented upon here, will reach twenty-eight weeks before a halt is called, and the piece will fracture all Pittsburgh records tomorrow by entering upon its eighth successive week in that centre of the drama.

To the various conditions mitigating against the profitable operation of a theatre in these times will presently be added the period immediately preceding the holidays. It is considered probable that three or four theatres, rather than endure the inevitable period of loss, will remain dark. Meanwhile, work on New York's seven or eight new playhouses is progressing as well as could be expected.

Despite the absence of a further formal announcement on the subject, Owen Davis's version of "The Arabian Nights" is being busily rehearsed at the Punch and Judy, and probably will open next month. Among those in the company are Manager Hopkins, Henry Kolker, William Riley Hatch, and W. J. Ferguson.

CAILLAVET AND DE FLERS

THE production of Leo Ditrichstein's adaptation of "Le Roi" on Tuesday night completed the cycle of American productions of the more important comedies of Caillavet and de Flers. Undoubtedly, if a history of celebrated dramatic collaborations ever is written, the names of Gaston Armand de Caillavet and Marquis Robert de Flers will figure high up in the list. Their fifteen years of collaboration resulted not only in a series of comedies successful in Paris, but in plays sufficiently broad in appeal to have almost as great a vogue in this country. At this writing it seems likely that the greatest of the Caillavet-de Flers successes in America will be "The King," even though it has been produced here in the midst of what promises to be an unprecedently bad theatrical season.

An interesting article on the collaboration of Caillavet and de Flers was written by Barrett H. Clarke in 1915, shortly after the death of Caillavet in battle. Wrote Mr. Clarke, in part:

"During the last fourteen years these 'Twin Stars of Heaven' of light comedy have illuminated the boulevards of Paris and afforded light to most of the theatrical centres of the world. One collaboration recalls another, and the closest analogy to the pair in question is that of Meilhac and Halévy.

"Monsieur de Caillavet told me that these writers were in a manner an inspiration to him and his associates; that they at one time served as their models. He told, in somewhat the following words, the story of that collaboration, which, as he expressed it, was the happy outcome of what seemed to him the mingling of 'elective affinities':

"'I wanted to enter the Ecole des Chartes and do historical research work. De Flers wished likewise to be a historian, but, as you see, fate decreed otherwise. We first met in 1887, and each felt that the other was destined to be a lifelong friend; meantime we went our respective ways. I became a director of revues. The little theatre where these were given was situated on the first floor of the Eiffel Tower. There I received my first, and, in many ways, my most valuable, criticism. You see, I had to go up in an elevator with my audience; and come down, too. It was during these descents that I heard things about myself and my work that I blushed to learn, but profited by.

"'From little revues I turned my hand to farces, which were produced at the Palais Royal. Meantime de Flers entered the newspaper world. He had also written some short stories and some travel books. In 1900 the time was ripe for us to join forces. In that year we wrote a ballet comic opera, 'Les Travaux d'Hercule,' and had the devil's own time getting it accepted; finally a manager took it as a stop-gap, and incidentally made quite a success of it. Our next play, "Les Sentiers de la Vertu," was a prose comedy; again we had trouble in getting the play produced, but its production was attended by some degree of success. Then we were on our feet.

"'Like Meilhac and Halévy, we have attempted to write satirical comedies in a light vein; they are concerned with political and religious matters at times, and are often sentimental or burlesque in character. Until 1907 we were unable to carry our disrespect for things very far into the political field; but since the abolition of the censorship that year we have done what I think is our best work. We respected nothing—church, State, religious beliefs, or persons—and in "Le Bois Sacre," "L'Habit Vert," and "Le Roi" we have satirized in turn the Legion of Honor, the Académie Française, and the national custom of entertaining members of royalty who visit Paris. Had the censorship still been in working order, these plays would never have been written.'

"De Flers and Caillavet never go too far; they are never so didactic as is Shaw, even in the least pointed of his comedies, 'You Never Can Tell.' Our authors have won their greatest successes of late in the field of satire; three of their finest works are political farces. 'Le Bois Sacre,' known in the United States as 'Decorating Clementine,' ridicules the craze for decorations in France.

"'Le Roi' is the most uproarious of their satires. Imagine the land of the Marseillaise turned topsy-turvy by the arrival of a royal personage, a boulevardier among boulevardiers. King Manuel of Portugal must have been the original."

The best known of the Caillavet-de Flers collaborations in America are "The Beautiful Adventure," "Decorating Clementine," "Love Watches," "Miquette," and "The Fan." Caillavet, in addition to these collaborations, wrote and produced thirty-one additional pieces in Paris. In the case of "The King" a third collaborator figures—Emmanuel Arene, associate editor and dramatic critic of Le Figaro—but it seems probable that the major portion of the play was the work of Caillavet and de Flers.

THE NEW PLAYS

THE period immediately preceding a holiday is customarily one of comparative quiet so far as new theatrical productions are concerned, but this year not even Thanksgiving week is materially affecting the onward march of the drama. A postponed première and the opening of the new French theatre will bring the number of the week's productions to five.

ART AND OPPORTUNITY—Tomorrow night at the Knickerbocker.

The author of "Art and Opportunity" was Harold Chapin, an American youth, who lost his life on the battlefield in 1915. Some years ago Mr. Chapin was represented on the New York stage by a piece entitled "The Marriage of Columbine," which was produced at the Punch and Judy Theatre, and "Art and Opportunity" was seen on the London stage some years ago, with Marie Tempest as its star. Here the leading rôle will be played by Eleanor Painter, an actress hitherto associated solely with the musical stage.

Miss Painter's supporting company will include Frank Mills, Cecil Yapp, Grant Stewart, Edward Douglas, Katharine Stewart, and Martin Hayden.

THE STAR GAZER—Tomorrow night at the Plymouth.

A Molière farce will be used to open the first season of the new French theatre in New York, and Jacques Copeau, the director, will appear in the leading rôle. M. Copeau, as is generally known, is the founder of the Théâtre du Vieux Colombier in Paris, a playhouse which in the short space of six months made itself internationally known, and the career of which, interrupted by the war, will now have its continuation in New York. The home of the Copeau company will be the erstwhile Garrick, which has been completely rebuilt for the occasion.

In addition to the Molière play there will be two novel features on the first week's program. The first of these will be an impromptu prologue, patterned after Molière, in which the director will discuss with his players the spirit and aims of the enterprise, and the second will be a ceremony in the course of which homage will be paid to the memory of Molière.

OVER THE TOP—Wednesday night at the Forty-fourth Street Roof Theatre.

Another new playhouse will be added to the long list when the Forty-fourth Street Roof Theatre opens its doors on Wednesday night. It will be not a roof garden, but a playhouse with all the equipment and appurtenances thereof, including a balcony. The entertainment will begin at 9 o'clock.

The first production will be a musical revue, "Over the Top," written by Philip Bartholomae, Sigmund Romberg, and Herman Timberg. Heading the cast will be T. Roy Barnes and Justine Johnstone, and the list of performers will also embrace Craig Campbell, Lauris and Bronson, a well-known vaudeville pair, Fred and Adele Astaire, and the mind-reading Sharrocks.

SIX MONTHS' OPTION—Thursday night at the Princess Theatre.

Dorothy Donnelly, one-time Madame X., will turn producer to offer this comedy by Ancella Anslee. It is a play of marriage and its complications, and the cast will include Minna Gombel, Jane Marbury, Stanley Ridges, David Quixano, W. T. Clarke, and Mrs. Jacques Martin.

The Spanish producers of "The Land of Joy" have hearkened unto the voice of the people, and the result will be a complete change tomorrow night in the American portions of the entertainment. Montague Glass has supplied much of the new material, and a number of new players will replace the former American contingent. Chief among these will be Julius Tannen, who will be present with some of his and Mr. Glass's quips and quirks, and the others will include John Daly Murphy, Edna Munsey, and Thomas Conkey.

"Pippa Passes" will be performed again tonight at the Neighborhood Playhouse.

IDLE GOSSIP OF THE STAGE AND STAGE FOLK

PLAYS THAT HEARTEN

By EDWARD CHILDS CARPENTER.

THIS war cannot be won without hope and faith. We cannot live and be helpful in this war and useful in this world without hope, faith, and confidence in ourselves In order to accomplish our most devout, our most earnest wishes we must arouse that personal enthusiasm, that patriotic impulse that bucks up our courage and gives the will to succeed, the faith to triumph.

These sentiments are not original, I am well aware, but I think they bear repetition with emphasis at this time. I have tried to lay some such emphasis, to put some suggestion of the hope and faith that stimulates courage, in my two plays of this season: "The Three Bears" and "The Pipes of Pan."

I do not mean to say that I set out to write "messages," but the ideas around which the stories of these two plays were constructed gave me the opportunity to suggest, in two entirely different ways, that, in these times of dark clouds, the old silver linings are still there.

I believe that "The Three Bears" and "The Pipes of Pan," in their lighthearted ways, are imparting some cheer and hope to their respective audiances.

Some evidence of this has already come to me in the form of letters. One woman, a mother who has three sons in the army, said to me that when she went to see "The Three Bears" she was "low in her mind," but that in some way it "put her mind at peace." The next night she went to see "The Pipes of Pan," and came away, so she told me, "with hope renewed."

Of course, things like that make a scribbler feel very happy. It begins to make you think that perhaps you have done a good job. It seems to indicate that what you had to say, in your foolish manner, reached somewhere near the mark. At any rate, it has given me faith to tuck away in the folds of a play a thought or two that may be worth thinking about.

In the case of "The Three Bears" I took two men, a lawyer and a violinist, who were suffering from nervous breakdown. They had been unfortunate in their respective affairs of the heart, and had hugged their troubles so persistently that they had become obsessed with them to such an extent that they were unable to practice their professions. Any nerve specialist will tell you that such cases are common. Experience has shown that the best cure for such patients is to make them stop thinking of their own troubles and become interested in some one else's troubles. This the doctor of the play tries to do when he takes them off to the Maine woods, but at the outset of the play he has failed.

Doloretes, One of the Dancers Who Are Giving "The Land of Joy" Its Vogue at the Park Theatre.

Then into their life comes the girl, received at first with disgust, but finally, as the two patients begin to concern themselves with the fortunes of their attractive visitor and make unselfish efforts in her behalf, they naturally think less and less of themselves. Thus their cure is accomplished. You see, the unselfish affection that Goldilocks inspires in her bears makes them forget what once weighed upon their minds, and, naturally, their faith in themselves is renewed.

In "The Pipes of Pan" I have taken as my hero a portrait painter, who, with his youth behind him, finds his inspiration flagging. His model, worldwise, sees the trouble. He needs, she declares, something to make him respond to the miracle of Spring that hovers all about him.

In through his window floats the music of the old earth come young again in April—the everlasting, joyous note of the great god Pan. But the painter does not hear it until Spring herself, in the person of his lost love, Valentine, comes into the studio and makes him hear the old song again.

For one day they catch, as it were, the hand of Youth as she makes her last farewell; they dance for a few hours together in the sunlight, while the shadows are lengthening; they live again one of their beloved yesterdays.

This dryad of the past must inevitably, as she does, go back to her oak tree, but she leaves behind her a light which we know will never fail the painter again. There is joy in his heart once again. So we leave him happily, with hope and the memory of his romance bright and clear, "like a fixed star."

If I can make the audience hear that same note of hope that my characters hear, perhaps I shall have helped to do my bit, and if I have, through the medium of these plays, momentarily relieved some tired minds of their depression, if I have made some brave souls forget their anxiety for a brief hour, I am repaid and fortunate.

MINUTE VISITS IN THE WINGS

STRANGELY enough, there is here and there a theatregoer who does not recall Harry Watson in the days when he was with the "Follies," but it is only fair to add that their number is few. Watson and his partner, George L. Bickel, were the principal comedians and a large percentage of the entertainment in the first three of Mr. Ziegfeld's annual extravaganzas—those dated 1907, 1908, and 1909. In 1912 Watson returned alone to the "Follies," and it was in this edition that he figured in the piano-carrying episode, a comedy bit which attracted wide attention and probably never has been excelled before or since.

Bickel and Watson came originally from the burlesque stage, where they appeared with Ed Lee Wrothe, who is still in burlesque, in a harlequinade called "Me, Him, and I," which was afterward taken from the burlesque wheel to tour as an independent attraction. Prior to joining the "Follies," and also after, Bickel and Watson appeared in a long succession of musical comedies, but their greatest successes were won in the "Follies." The first of the comic bands, in the 1907 "Follies," was in the hands and lungs of Bickel and Watson, and Watson's prizefighter bit, in 1908, (now revived in the current "Odds and Ends of 1917,") was another comedy classic.

After the 1912 "Follies" the comedians listened to the voice of the movie man, and the stage did not know them again for several years, when they entered vaudeville. The team separated something more than a year ago, during and engagement at the Palace, and simultaneously Watson retired from the stage. He went to his home in Beechhurst, Long Island, where he has spent the past year in nothing more comic than the bringing up of radishes and kindred articles.

The offer to join Norworth was at first declined by Watson on the ground that the rewards of acting were not worth enduring the force of petty jealousies which frequently make life miserable for the comedian in a musical show. Norworth's assurance that nothing of the sort was possible in this instance impelled him to reconsider, however, and the result was Watson's triumphant return to New York on Monday night, when he demonstrated anew all of his old talents as a comedian and fairly kept the house in an uproar.

It is worthy of note, incidentally, that Bickel also is preparing to return to the stage in a musical play.

ONE of those whom the current Century revue has brought into the public eye has been a youth named Andrew Tombes. Tombes is a comedian. His present appearance at the Century is his first on the legitimate stage of Broadway, although he has long been well known in vaudeville as the mainstay of a tabloid musical show called "The Bride Shop."

Eleanor Painter, Who Will Be Seen on the Knickerbocker Stage Tomorrow Night in Harold Chapin's Comedy, "Art and Opportunity."

Tombes, booked for Princeton by his father, ran away from Exeter at sixteen to join an organization known as "The Who, What and When Minstrel Company," which made a specialty of finding towns not mentioned on the map. He was the principal comedian in this organization, and received a salary of $6 a week. This was in 1903. On returning to his home in Ashtabula at the end of that season he joined a stock company in Cleveland, and then became a member of the Charles B. Hanford répertoire company. During that season he frequently played in one week such Shakespearean rôles as Iago, Launcelot, Grumio, Julius Caesar, and Dogberry.

This was a hardening process both mentally and physically, and prepared him for a less arduous season on the road in "The Darling of the Gods," with Christine Norman in the part created by Blanche Bates. After this Mr. Tombes was in vaudeville for a while, and then tried his hand at burlesque, being one of the comedians in Max Speigel's "College Girls," of which Fannie Brice, now a star in Ziegfeld's "Follies," was an associate member. One season of burlesque was enough; he jumped as gracefully as a fawn from burlesque to Shakespeare, playing a season in "Cymbeline" and "A Winter's Tale." Four years ago he went back to vaudeville.

ANNE MEREDITH, at present a member of the fortunate resident or thereabouts company playing "Polly with a Past" at the Belasco, rather fancied in her childhood days that a circus career would be about the proper thing for her. At the age of 11 Miss Meredith, attending school in Toronto, ran away to join a traveling sawdust and elephant organization. Two unsympathetic parents, however, brought about her return and thus saved her to the American stage.

It was in a French play which was presented before the Alliance Française, as part of her graduation exercises, that Miss Meredith received her first stage experience. Shortly afterward an offer came to her to join the French Theatre, for Miss Meredith speaks French fluently, but, having decided in the meantime to take up a stage career, she preferred to play in her native tongue and declined the engagement.

Daniel Frohman was the manager who gave Miss Meredith a start by engaging her for a small rôle in "The Boys of Company B." When the season of this play closed she went into stock, where she remained for several years, thereby gaining considerable experience and playing a wide répertoire of parts. Upon her return to Broadway Miss Meredith created an important rôle in "The Road to Yesterday," and then proved her versatility by playing a siren part in "The Love Leech," and later a seventeen-year-old girl in "Mrs. Dot" with Billie Burke

When "The Follies of 1911" was presented one of its chief features was a symbolical playlet, "Everywife," in which Miss Meredith assumed the title rôle. Although this feature was different from the usual texture of which "The Follies" is composed, it was received with marked favor, due in no small measure to the charm and authority of her portrayal.

A prominent rôle in A. E. Thomas's comedy, "What the Doctor Ordered," next engaged Miss Meredith's attention, and she followed this up by appearing with Margaret Illington in "Kindling," in which her work as a young society girl interested in settlement conditions called forth considerable praise. Following this she was seen in "The Indiscretion of Truth," one of the lesser plays by J. Hartley Manners.

Despite the various rôles which Miss Meredith had played, Mr. Belasco was following an unbeaten path when he cast her for a rôle of the romantic type last season in "Seven Chances." The manner in which she handled this part led to the present rôle, and with it Miss Meredith takes a more or less solid place on the coveted Belasco roster.

WHERE TO GO TONIGHT.

The seeker after Sunday night amusement will have more than the usual number of attractions from which to make his choice tonight. A benefit performance at the Hippodrome will enlist the services of Jack Norworth, Louis Mann, Elsie Janis, Joan Sawyer, and Leo Carillo, among others; and there will be entertainments at the Century, the Park, the Winter Garden and the 44th St.

THE HISTORY OF "MADAME SAND"

AN inquiry into the circumstances attendant upon the writing of "Madame Sand" brings to light a number of matters which the nature of the play and the identity of the author hardly would have led one to expect. In particular, the association of Philip Moeller with the Washington Square Players, whose ways are not the ways of Broadway and commercialism, conjures up a vision of an idea given birth by the side of a rippling stream and worked out at great length in an attic containing not more than three pieces of furniture, and preferably only two. The facts of the matter are, however, that "Madame Sand" was a manager-fostered piece from the beginning, that it was sold on the strength of a scenario, and then written to order in thirteen days.

"Madame Sand" had its beginnings more than a year and one-half ago in the office of a certain theatrical manager, a man who had severed his connection with a well-known producing firm to branch out for himself. He had been much interested in the success achieved by Moeller in connection with the activities of the Washington Square Players, at that time housed Somewhere in Fifty-seventh Street. (Moeller was one of the founders of this organization, the director of many of its productions, and the author of several one-act plays produced by its members. One of these, "Helena's Husband," has been called the best one-act comedy ever written in this country.)

The manager in question was at that time engaged in dexterously manoevering for the services of one of the most popular actresses in this country, and he had conceived the notion that a play with a musical background might prove a good medium for her use—providing she agreed to "go along" on the proposition he had made to her. He was preparing for eventualities.

"Could you," he asked Moeller, "write me a play with a musical theme or a musical background? I think it should be a comedy—yes, I would prefer a comedy."

Out from the lower depths of Moeller's mind which the Freudian psychologists call the unconscious, there leaped into the field of consciousness these words: "How would a play about George Sand do?"

Moeller had long been a great admirer of Sand, and had, within a year, been reading about her in a more or less desultory fashion, but he had never before consciously had the idea of putting her into a play.

"Sounds enormous," said the manager. "How would you treat it?"

"Why, I'd start with the De Musset affair," began Moeller, and then continued, sketching in rough outline the plot which is now the basis of the produced play. De Musset was in it, and Heine and Dr. Pagello and Chopin and Lisst, and even the secondary characters who now figure with them.

The manager liked the idea and the outlined story so much that he suggested that Moeller write out the scenario and send it to him for consideration. This the author did almost immediately. There then followed a walt of an entire year, during which a correspondence passed between Moeller and the manager that would, if printed, fill a large-sized volume. The manager had not "bagged" his star and could not make up his mind whether he cared to do the play. Finally, in desperation, Moeller wrote asking for the return of the scenario. Word came back that it had been lost.

Then it was that Moeller sought out Arthur Hopkins. This was early last Summer. He submitted a copy of the scenario and Mr. Hopkins promised to give it immediate attention. He read it that night and telephoned the author the next morning.

"Come over to my office immediately," he said, "and promise me not to talk to any other manager on the way."

Mr. Hopkins practically agreed to sign a contract for the production of the play, and urged Moeller to begin writing it at once. The latter did so the next morning in his apartment on West Twelfth Street.

He finished the first act in exactly four days and submitted it to Mr. Hopkins.

"The most promising first act I have ever read," was the latter's comment. "Keep on while the spirit moves you."

And then came a douche of cold water in the form of a summons to serve on the Federal Grand Jury, about to convene. Moeller sought to persuade the Judge that art called him, but the latter seemed to think that art could wait a little while without suffering severe discomfort, and ordered him to report for duty. The second act of "Madame Sand" was, accordingly, written in four mornings, the author arising at 7 and working until noon. At noon on each of these days he dropped down to the old Post Office and listened to the details of a case "involving something about drains in the Brooklyn Navy Yard."

To be sure, he did go to Gloucester, Mass., to write the third act, but only because he was "dog tired," and felt the need of the bracing sea air. The last act, it might be added, was written in exactly five days.

When the completed manuscript of the play was read by Mr. Hopkins that manager realized that the one actress in the American theatre who could do justice to the central rôle was Mrs. Fiske. That actress had just signed a contract to appear under the direction of Klaw & Erlanger and George C. Tyler. Mr. Hopkins, taking a chance, sent the play to Harrison Grey Fiske, with the request that it be submitted by the latter to his wife for a reading.

Now, Mrs. Fiske, it had been announced, was to appear in another play, on which advance royalties had been paid. She returned the Moeller piece, however, with an expression of hope that something might be done about it.

"It is the most interesting rôle I have had submitted to me," she wrote George C. Tyler. "Please read the play and see what you think."

Mr. Tyler read the play the day he received this letter and became so enthusiastic that he arranged to have the projected production of the other play indefinitely postponed. A conference with Mr. Hopkins resulted in the perfecting of an arrangement whereby the latter, Klaw & Erlanger, and Mr. Tyler became jointly interested in the production of "Madame Sand."

To revert for a moment to Moeller. He began writing plays, according to his own story, when he was 8 years old. At that time, however, his great ambition was not to be a playwright, but to be a magician. He gave elaborate magical shows for the children of his neighborhood, and could see himself in his adult years attired in black satin knickerbockers and waving an ebony wand, while ravishingly beautiful ladies at his word of command disappeared from rope-bound trunks and came running down the aisles of thronged theatres.

His playwriting, up to the time of "Madame Sand," was concerned with one-act pieces with the single exception of a three-act play entitled "The Battlefield," which was produced some years ago by a group of amateurs. Since the beginning of the work of the Washington Square Players he has had charge of the production of fifteen plays presented by them, and has written four of the one-act pieces which have had production at the Bandbox and at the Comedy, their present home. These were "Two Blind Beggars and One Less Blind," "Helena's Husband," "The Roadhouse in Arden" and "Sisters of Susannah." The last three were all satires. The first was a tragic little thing with an ironic bite.

In view of the many descriptive phrases used in describing the play, it is interesting to have Moeller's own word concerning his intention. Though he has called it a "biographical comedy" on the program, he says that he considers it a "sublimated burlesque," which is, to say the least, something new under the theatrical sun.

THE TRUTH ABOUT FARCE

THE theory that a farce is the most difficult of the dramatic forms is one that has come down through the ages side by side with the aphorism that plays are not written, but rewritten. A more or less exhaustive research conducted among managers and authors tends rather to confirm than to upset the latter, despite the frequence of its repetition. As for the former, at least one theatrical man—one who is both manager and author, as well as unusually successful in the handling of farces—believes that the average farce is easier to write and produce than the average drama. The man in question is Edgar Selwyn, who has had unusual opportunities to observe farces in the making and remaking, and to participate in the processes. Declares Mr. Selwyn:

"It hardly can be accurate to describe farce as the most difficult dramatic form when so many of them have been remade, and successfully remade, practically over night. On the whole, I should be inclined to say that a farce, by reason of its plastic nature, is the easiest of all. In a serious drama the entire structure is so arranged as to lead to one definite end. In farce, too, there is an ultimate end in view, but in reaching it there is the utmost freedom of choice as to style and method. Farce is a volatile sort of thing, anyway. Its success depends so much more on externals than does the ordinary drama.

"You rarely hear of the big scene in a drama having been inserted after the piece was written, because the drama generally was written around that scene. In the case of a farce, on the contrary, the funniest bits are frequently decided upon while the piece is in the course of production, and sometimes on the eve of the premiere. Then, too, a continuity is demanded in drama which the rapid tempo of farce frequently renders unnecessary, and any disturbance of that dramatic continuity, as for the purpose of inserting an additional scene, for example, generally means an entirely new smoothing out of the piece.

"The case of 'Losing Eloise' is a recent example of what can be done with a farce. Between the time of the dress rehearsal on Friday night and the opening on Saturday night we introduced one entirely new situation and wrote dialogue for it. It turned out to be the funniest scene in the play.

"And, to betray another secret, the famous cocktail scene in 'Fair and Warmer,' which has been commented on wherever the play has been seen, was really worked out in its final form between a last-minute rehearsal held the afternoon of the opening and the time the curtain went up a few hours later.

"When we are producing a farce we welcome visitors at rehearsals after the first rough edges have been worn off, and in the case of 'Losing Eloise' we gathered many a good idea from friends who dropped in to see how things were going. And we got some knowledge of what we had and what we didn't have. On several occasions, expecting to find our guests laughing, we found them star-gazing, and vice versa. Mind you, though, I would not advise that method in the case of any other kind of play.

"It so happens that the best farces with which I have come into contact have started with little more than an original idea, and the action of the play has developed as the production progressed. But, last this office be immediately flooded with farces, let me emphasize one thing. First catch your original idea."

HOW ARE THE PICTURES DOING?

AN interesting analysis of conditions at present attending the manufacture and marketing of motion pictures is made by Samuel Goldfish, one of the first of the film pioneers, and now head of the Goldwyn Company. While Mr. Goldfish's sermon is in part a technical one, it deals with a matter which vitally affects the public which goes to the movies, and is particularly interesting in view of certain recent developments in pictures. The warning he sounds is that the films, if they are to continue to flourish, must retain their greatest safeguard—economy in price, based on economy in manufacture.

"The motion-picture industry is in a dangerous condition," Mr. Goldfish declares. "Disaster is very close indeed. The war has not hit attendance at motion-picture houses as hard as it has at the Broadway theatres, but that is only because the scale of prices is so much lower, and the great democratic audiences of the screen are drawn largely from those who are getting more employment and more profitable employment through the war. The success and the health of the motion picture is based on the modest price of admission at which good films can be seen. The dangerous, even disastrous, conditions in the industry of which I have spoken are due to the fact that all manner of competitive extravagance is threatening to destroy that one safeguard—and, with it, the industry itself.

"I am not a calamity howler by temperament. And I'm not disgruntled; for Goldwyn is getting its share, and more than its share, through the most careful attention to organization. But in the plain face of the criminal waste of the producer's money, the exhibitor's money, and—in the last analysis—the public's money, somebody should speak out plainly.

"If you ask me what is wrong with this topheavy industry of ours, I should say—organization. Fundamentally all our producing organizations are wrong. Fundamentally all our distributing organizations are wrong.

"Take distribution. There are about twenty-five different distributing organizations in America, all of them maintaining some two dozen branch offices throughout the country. These twenty-five exchanges serving the State of Maine, to take a single flagrant example, have only twenty-eight cities and towns—small ones at that—in which to sell films. Think of the absurdity of twenty-five salesmen trying to sell the same product—motion-picture entertainment—to only twenty-eight customers! It is worse than absurd. It is ruinous. The cost to a producer of maintaining his score of exchanges, with managers, its capacity. Two big distributing organizations could handle all the films in America—and save the industry $200,000 a week. That $10,000,000 a year would mean something to producers, to exhibitors, and to the public. To get another angle on it, suppose every magazine in America maintained its own exclusive distributing channels. Would The Cosmopolitan still sell for 20 cents or Harper's Magazine for 35 cents?

"We are facing just the same problem in production—lack of organization and topheavy financing. Everybody in the industry is being overpaid except the pocketbooks that furnish the capital. All in a mad, unscientific scramble for a very few illusory big profits which have been made here and there.

"The cost of production has gone up at a terrific rate, a rate that the public has no conception of. When we made the first Geraldine Farrar picture, 'Carmen,' during my connection with the Lasky Company, it cost only $35,000. Today the same production could not be duplicated for less than $150,000.

"Rentals, the prices charged exhibitors for the films, have advanced accordingly. To pay these increased rentals the exhibitors have had to increase prices—to strike at the prop of popularity on which the public's love for this new entertainment fundamentally rests. The producer, in turn, has had to put more and more money into productions in order to give the exhibitor the quality pictures which will induce the public to pay higher admission prices. Obviously, the producer is paying too much, the exhibitor is paying too much, and the public—through all this extravagance—is paying too much. It is a vicious circle that only the producer can break.

"It isn't easy—trying to put matters right. See what happens under this condition of abnormal competition. A man who has picked up enough capital in Wall Street to make a single picture can jump in, offer some big star a fabulous salary—about all the money he has—and then, with the contract safe in his pocket, draw forth enough further capital to start making pictures. Meanwhile his big salary to the star has done its great harm and sent other salaries skyrocketing.

"The exhibitors themselves are now coming into this game. Some of the theatre owners have organized a circuit which has gone into a new form of production and distribution, and is now bidding against the producers for stars. Up go salaries again. And up go rentals, too.

"It has got to the state where, if a star wakes up and finds it's a nice day, she makes up her mind she wants a million dollars instead of eight hundred thousand.

"The big factor in keeping down moving-picture prices, I feel, is the producer. He must organize. The great steel industry was in just such a chaotic condition before the coming of the United States Steel Corporation. If the producing factors in moving pictures money in extravagant competition for a doubtful product—personal fame. For no matter how big a star may be, unless there is a big story, too, business will begin to wane after the first night. Broadway has found that the star is very nearly played out as a lone drawing card. Some of its biggest stage figures have had ignominious failures this season because their plays were no better than the so-called 'vehicles' which had done service for them in the past. The screen is as 'star-crazy' as the stage was five and ten years ago, but evolution is at work in the studios quite as much as on Broadway.

"Another tremendous evil of the industry's disorganization is the overproduction of pictures. We are making too many for either profit or art. More than twenty long feature films are being turned out every week. We could get along with ten. We could give them to the exhibitors for less, and they would earn more money for us. The public would like them better and talk about them more. Word of mouth advertising would take the place of exploiting star names. It is simply impossible to find good stories at the rate they are demanded by our present system.

"Spending money for famous plays to make into films is no cure-all. Goldwyn encountered a very interesting difficulty with Margaret Mayo's 'Baby Mine.' A year or so ago film versions of plays were supposed to kill theatrical versions. The all-star 'Trilby' had to quit because it found the film 'Trilby' taking all its business and utilizing the advertising it had created. Right now, within my own knowledge, the condition has been reversed. When 'Baby Mine' was announced in a large up-State city, a stock company promptly put the play into rehearsal and got the benefit of all our publicity.

"What's to be done about all this? Well, first of all, box-office prices must be kept within reason—or this great, popular, democratic industry will be killed. The strength of the motion picture lies not in its novelty—which would have been exhausted long ago—but in its ability to satisfy a great, broad desire for entertainment at a price within the reach of all the people. The two-dollar spectacle is done for. As a matter of fact, there was only one that ever made money. And for every dollar made by 'The Birth of a Nation' twice as much has been lost by producers who tried to follow that lead.

"The big factor in keeping down moving-picture prices, I feel, is the producer. He must organize. The great steel industry was in just such a chaotic condition before the coming of the United States Steel Corporation. If the producing factors in moving pictures

ATTENTION is called by Paramount to the gradual passing of burlesque film and the substitution of the comedy film in its place. To be sure, the film of the custard pie and seat-of-the-pants school has not yet passed, but its vogue is obviously on the wane. The very earliest "comedies" generally consisted of zig-zag chases and some trick photography, a diversion that survives to this day with a few producers. Then gradually the personal element entered, but at first it was pure physical grotesqueness that figured.

One of the earliest film comedians was the late John Bunny, whose popularity was enormous. His rise to success was indicative of what the film then demanded of comedy—a funny face, an unusual figure, something striking, unusual, easily recognized on the screen. Bunny, of course, had far more to his funniness than that, but Bunny never would have been Bunny if he had looked like Robert Mantell.

All screen comedy in those days had a tendency toward burlesque by the same token that all drama seemed to demand excessive action and exaggerated expression. There has come into photoplays, in other words, a much-needed restraint. In comedy this restraint is best exemplified in the Douglas Fairbanks pictures. Even the art of C. Chaplin has felt the touch of a new discipline, while the Sennett farces, wild as they are, have about them none of the slip-shod, banal gaucheries that characterised the old school.

The greatest difficulty early film comedy had to surmount was the dearth of good material to work from. Scenario writers were paid so little that the field did not attract a single humorist of any reputation. Little by little conditions improved. George Ade took a hand at film humor and, so far as he himself had to do with the productions, his humor carried splendidly. The Ade titles are considered by some as the beginning of an originality and humor in screen titles, something that had been entirely lacking before his advent.

Among the humorous writers more or less lately drawn into film work are Gelett Burgess, Wallace Irwin, George M. Cohan, James Montgomery Flagg, Owen Johnson, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Rupert Hughes, and Caroline Wells.

The thousands who besiege the large motion-picture companies with requests for work in the movies have grown no less in numbers recently, despite the fact that one is beginning to hear less about them. Hundreds of letters from would-be screen actors and actresses are received every day by the movie companies, and in some instances the number runs into thousands. The few examples which follow, quoted verbatim, are from the mail bag of Paramount. The author of the first is an Indian:

"Paramount Pictures: "Maine.

"Dear Sir.—I would like to hear from you in regards to moving-picture acting. I am an Indian nineteen years old (19 yr) A Penobscot Indian. I can Paddle a Canoe very good have always had one since I can remember, also swim run Play Golf, Tennis, Bare Ball, Basket Ball, Foot Ball Croquot, also hunt. I have taken a few Vocal singing lessons I shall continue to take them I also have learned a trade as a Textile Worker have three years experience (3) yr have good idea of a woolen mill could act as a boss in any department of the Mill. Tell me how much money it would cost. I could pay my fare out there. If you have nothing to offer Please send this letter to some other Corporation that would take Indians and oblige.

P. S. I also have a good idea of College Life I live near the College."

The second is from the most typical among the screen-struck, the young girl of fourteen or thereabout:

"Texas.

"Manager of Paramount Corporation.

Dear Sir: I am writing you for a job as a moving-picture Girl. I cannot give any references as an actress but can in character. One must have a start to get references. I could play a part of a Spaniard as I know the ways of the Spaniards and Mexicans almost perfect. I am a very young girl and I have a perfect horror of immoral things. I know the wrongs that are committed in the large cities but if a girl attends to her own business she will not get into any trouble. Please answer by return mail if possible."

The writer of the following inclosed a diagram of his "trick cars" to show how they worked:

"Sir: I suppose you gave that picture I sent to you once over and thought that guy must be a nut or something of that sort or he might had seen Chaplin in comedy and thought he could do as good as Chaplin. Well if thats what you thought you got a nother thought coming. Well has Chaplin anything on me? I got trick cars.

very truly yours
a Nut as you think."

And then this from a New Mexico prison:

"Dear Sir: as I am a wild west Bronko Buster and will be out of hear in a few days will write you to see if thier is any opening for such a man with you. I have got 5 head of fine jumping horses and would like to get in some picture taking outfit for I have work for several pictures cameras. Can you send me a photo of Miss Blanch Ring I think I have met her before and I remain, yours res."

The failure of "The Rescuing Angel" has sent Billie Burke back into the pictures, and work is about to be begun on a film version of "Eve's Daughter," Grace George's late vehicle at the Playhouse. Lionel Atwill of Miss George's company probably will appear in his original rôle in the screen production.

The screen rights of Edward Sheldon's dramatisation of "The Song of Songs," which was played here a few seasons ago by a cast of notables, have been obtained in behalf of Elsie Ferguson. Irene Fenwick played the principal rôle on the stage. "Rose of the World" has been completed by Miss Ferguson and will be released soon.

Charlotte, whose appearance at the Hippodrome two years ago started the dancing craze in these parts, has transferred her art, stances and all, into pictures. She is the heroine of a six-reel film as yet unnamed, which has a to form another company of the same sort, and the new organization is now at work on its first film. The first company, headed by a pair of talented youngsters named Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, appeared in "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp." The new company includes George Stone, an urchin well known in the movies.

Madge Kennedy, already more or less solidly established in the film world, is at present engaged in acting in a movie version of George Weston's story, "Oh, Mary, Be Careful."

Ray Harbe, who succeeded Justine Johnstone as one of the decorative damsels in "Oh, Boy," is about to enter pictures via the Vitagraph. She will be seen first in a picture having Earle Williams for its star.

"The Volunteer," a film about to be released by the World folk, has no less a person than William A. Brady for one of its players. The story concerns a child movie star who is sent West, and before going she bids good-bye to the various notables at the World studio. Among those who bid her a tearful farewell are Mr. Brady, Harley Knoles, her director; Kitty Gordon, Ethel Clayton, June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley, Carlyle Blackwell, and Montagu Love.

William J. Flynn is the newest of film authors. Captain Flynn has written a twenty-episode Secret Service serial, which will be handled by the Hoffman-Fourequare Pictures.

"The Passing of the Third Floor Back," with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson as its star, is now in process of manufacture at Herbert Brenon's studios. In it Molly Pearson, the ever-remembered Bunty, is making her first screen appearance, playing the rôle of the slavey, which she also played during the run of the piece at the Maxine Elliott Theatre in the season of 1909-10.

The first Petrova picture to be made under that actress's own direction is called "Daughter of Destiny," and is a film which has Europe and the war for its background.

HATS OFF TO THE U. S. ANTHEM

America, as a Western exchange reminds its readers, has no national anthem, hymn, or air by provision of any Federal law. Army and navy regulations constitute the authority for calling "The Star-Spangled Banner" a national air. The custom of rising and standing with hats off while the famous tune is being played has indeed become general, but it is only obligatory among army and navy men.

Whenever the national air is played at any place where persons belonging to the military or naval service are present, all officers and enlisted men not in formation are required to stand at attention, facing toward the music, excepting when the flag is being lowered at sunset, on which occasion they are required to face toward the flag.

If in civilian dress and uncovered, they are required to stand and salute at the first note of the air, retaining their position of salute until the last note of the air is played. If in civilian dress and covered, they are required to stand and uncover, holding the head dress opposite the left shoulder, except in inclement weather, when the cap or hat may be held slightly raised.

MANY CHORAL PROGRAMS.

Programs of the Philharmonic Society this season will contain many choral works, among the first being the "Dante" symphony of Liszt, just heard. The Ninth Symphony of Beethoven will be given by the orchestra in January, with the help of the Philharmonic Chorus, newly organized by Louis Koemmenich.

Gustav Mahler's Third Symphony, also on the list, will be heard for the first time in New York. The St. Cecilia Club, a women's chorus of 120 voices, led by Victor Harris, and a boy choir recruited by T. Tertius Noble of St Thomas's, and G. Darlington Richards of St. James's Church, will co-operate with the Philharmonic in the presentation of the Mahler Symphony.

MORE RUSSIAN AIRS.

The Russian Symphony Society announces many novelties for this season. In addition to those produced at the first concert, some other works new to the American public are the "Finniah Sketches" by Glazounoff, a third number from a cycle of four symphonies by Gliere, called "Ilia Mauromuetz," after an ancient Russian hero; a tone picture by Gretchaninoff, for voice and orchestra, "On the Cross Roads"; two compositions by S. Wassilenko, entitled "Hyrcus Nocturnus" and "In the Sun"; Liadow's last scene from "The Bride of Messina"; Alexander Spendiarow's "Legend of the Sermon of Soda," and Igor Stravinsky's "King of the Stars" and "The Shepherdess and the Faun."

Oscar Seagle presents a programme of unusual variety at his first New York recital this season. A discriminating group of old French chansons, in which line Mr. Seagle's prominence is too well known to need comment, opens the programme.

The second group of Dvorak Gipsy Songs is extremely timely, coming as it does at a moment when America is stirring to understand the complex Slav nature. These songs express to a marvelous degree the great love of individual liberty which is the fundamental characteristic of the Slav.

The third group might be called the patriotic group; the air from "Patrie" by Paladilhe kindles anew the admiration for the patriotism and courage which Belgium has shown in her now hour of trial. "La-bas" by Fourdrain, the modern French composer whose songs are so much in vogue, has caught the soul of much tried Alsace, her suffering and her hope.

One of the most interesting groups will be the Negro Spirituals.

Ray Comstock and Morris Gest's magnificent, gorgeous and glittering production of

THE DISLOYAL TEACHER PROBLEM

Wholesale Investigation Not to be Made, But Individual Cases as Reported Will Be Closely Examined.

IN this inquiry regarding "sedition" in New York public schools a problem—recognized as one of the most delicate and difficult the Board of Education has had to face—has been looked into from several sides.

William G. Willcox, President of the Board of Education, says two things should be done:

First, anti-patriotic teachers must be dismissed from the public schools, investigation of the most careful kind must precede action; no teacher must be treated unfairly.

Second, no teacher must be allowed cause to feel that freedom of personal opinion, freedom of speech, is being unduly or improperly interfered with, or that the authorities are jumping at unproved accusations of disloyalty.

The suspension of three teachers from the De Witt Clinton High School and their summons to a hearing on the charge of "holding views which undermine good citizenship," together with the transfer of six other teachers and the beginning of a city-wide investigation under the Board of Superintendents, was not the first action to be taken against sedition in the public schools, nor were these the first rumors of disloyalty, and early in November Mr. Willcox enlisted the Teachers' Council as a committee of the whole to investigate and work against disloyalty among public school teachers. In his attitude toward the whole situation President Willcox makes it clear that he is most anxious for the authorities to avoid even the appearance of injustice, but also he is immovably firm in his determination that disloyal men and women should not be allowed to teach in the schools of New York.

"The matter is difficult and delicate," Mr. Willcox said after the situation in the De Witt Clinton High School had come to a head some days ago. "Beyond question we must be careful not to give any teacher the ground for belief that we are interfering with individual opinions. That is not the question involved. The question is whether a teacher is or is not qualified to teach. The right to free thought and to free speech must not be interfered with improperly or unduly. We are not considering the individual's opinions, or even his individual loyalty, but the effect upon the children, and the qualifications for teaching. And when we act we must make sure what the condition is. That is the right and the duty of the Board of Education.

"To teach in the public schools, men and women must be qualified to teach what the American people want taught. There are many things more important than academic subjects. A teacher who has an immoral influence upon the pupils, for instance, must go, no matter how good an academic teacher he or she may be. And in a time like the present especially it becomes a necessity not only to guard against disloyalty, but to insist that no teachers who are merely passive or neutral in ideals of patriotism and the obligations of citizenship are meeting the requirements essential for teachers in our public schools.

"For today the most essential requirement for teachers is a positive, aggressive, enthusiastic patriotism, a patriotism which promotes the pupils' respect for lawful authority and a true conception of the obligations of loyal allegiance and patriotic service to the American Government. It is my personal opinion that teachers who are not meeting that requirement should be dismissed."

Mr. Willcox is not in favor of a wholesale investigation of the loyalty of every teacher in the public schools. He does not consider that necessary. Most of the teachers, he says, are unquestionably loyal. Those who are not make it quickly evident, or arouse suspicion.

"Wherever reports come in that indicate a disloyal or un-American attitude on the part of any teacher," Mr. Willcox continued, "investigation must be made fully and without delay. If ground for it appears, the teacher must be summoned to a definite hearing. But as a matter of fact, I have personally no doubt that in most cases the reports will be found to be unfounded, and that the cases that come up for hearings will be comparatively few. I have no idea of a wholesale investigation of the teaching staff. But I have asked the Teachers' Council to look out very carefully for any evidence of disloyalty, and they agree that no suggestion could be more vital and important than this."

In talking to the Teachers' Council, a body of forty-five members which represents the whole teaching force, Mr. Willcox went into detail in the consideration of the present danger that threatens the schools.

"In this great national crisis the teachers of our public schools, as leaders of thought and centres of influence, face at once a grave responsibility and a splendid opportunity," he said. "The first great need is to unify and organize the American people. For military purposes an unorganized democracy is as helpless as an unorganized mob. To create an effective instrument for winning the war, Americans must submit to Government organization with autocratic authority supported by loyal and unquestioning confidence and allegiance. This is a new experience for democracy. In years of unbroken peace we have indulged and encouraged individual freedom of thought, speech, and action, with little consideration of the effect on the general welfare. The time has now come when the rights and privileges of the individual must be subordinated to the interests of the nation, when every word or act must be judged by its influence or effect upon the one supreme object of winning the war.

"I believe that loyalty and patriotism actuate the great majority of public school teachers, but I am concerned by other reports of a quite different spirit. Many of you must have heard, as I have, reports regarding individual teachers which indicate a deplorable unfitness to inculcate in their pupils high ideals of patriotic American citizenship. Masquerading under the guise of socialism or of individual liberty of thought and speech, we find intimations of actual anarchy, of utter failure to recognize and appreciate the obligation of loyal support and obedience to lawfully constituted government as the first duty of citizenship.

"I make no charges against any member of the teaching staff. I fully realise the danger of judgment based upon false or exaggerated rumors. There is much loose talk about socialism and pacifism as if they were synonymous with disloyalty. Socialism is not disloyalty, it is a scheme of government which has much to commend it in theory however disappointing it may be in practical application; pacifism is not disloyalty unless it expresses itself in disloyal speech or action. Freedom of thought and speech limited only by the rights of others is the inherent right of every citizen. But loyal support of the American Government in thought and word and act is the very cornerstone of American democracy.

"The situation presents such a serious problem that I have determined to ask the advice and help of the Teachers' Council in dealing with it. If there is no basis for the charge of disloyalty the teaching staff should be cleared of any such suspicion. If there is any foundation for the charge the self-respect and professional pride of the teaching staff should assert themselves in unanimous and vigorous protest and bring to the bar of public opinion every disloyal teacher in the system."

Not all the officials of the city school system are so optimistic as Mr. Willcox in his belief that the evil of disloyalty is not, comparatively, widespread. At the meeting of the Board of Education on Nov. 13, at which the three High School teachers were suspended and six others transferred, Arthur S. Somers, a member of the Board, declared that the city schools were "hotbeds of sedition." Dr. John L. Tildsley, Associate City Superintendent and Chairman of the High Schools Committee, on whose charges the suspensions and transfers were made, said later that further investigation of the twenty-four high schools had revealed a condition of actual menace.

Dr. Tildsley has asked the Principals of all the city high schools to submit the names of all teachers suspected of holding un-American views. About 2,500 teachers are employed in the twenty-four high schools. There are about 20,000 teachers under the city public school system.

Meanwhile, the action of the Board of Education and the Department of Superintendents is not proceeding without opposition. Thomas W. Churchill, former President of the Board of Education, voted against the transfer of teachers from the De Witt Clinton High School, although he voted for the suspension of the three against whom more specific charges were made. His vote against the transfer was the only dissenting vote cast. He said later that he was opposed to such action because it was a vague punishment, without formal accusation or charges, and added that accusations and evidence in such matters should be definite and public.

Within the teaching force itself the opposition to the action of the Board of Education has been to a great extent carried on by the Teachers' Union, an organization of about 700 members, of which Henry Linville of Jamaica is President. But it is worthy of note that officers of the Federation of Teachers' Association have repudiated the "union" as not representing the great loyal teaching body. In a statement to THE TIMES on the subject of the "sedition" charges Dr. Linville went back to the friction between teachers and authorities over the increase in the length of the school day and the "high school strikes" of the Autumn. There was, he continued, a general condition of unrest in the De Witt Clinton High School long ago, before the United States went into the war at all, and asserted that it had nothing to do with the matter of loyalty. In explanation of his attitude and that of the Teachers' Union in the present situation, however, he continued:

"A correct interpretation of the situation as it has developed on account of the very serious charges preferred by Superintendent Tildsley and accepted by the Board of Education involves two lines of consideration, one with the attitude of the educational authorities toward freedom of thought among teachers, the other with the significance of 'disloyalty' toward the educational authorities.

"Whether we call it the arrogance of Prussianism, or merely dumb stupidity, the mob spirit has been turned loose on nine teachers of excellent standing, and the community has been led to believe through innuendoes, loose accusations, and unscientific and improper investigations, that the nine teachers are virtually traitors to the nation. Whatever the evidence may be that to the minds of the school authorities indicates that some teachers are not 100 per cent. American, the public is kept in the dark about the nature of anything convincing, while the conclusion is allowed to besmirch the reputations of hitherto blameless servants of the city."

Dr. Linville said that public statements made at the time of the teachers' suspension had not shown radical utterances in the classroom, or made it plain that the teachers held "specific radical notions," and went on:

"Granted that they do, which is not improbable, if flesh and blood teachers are to come from the real democratic world, the commendable practice of Dr. Tildsley himself when he was Principal of the De Witt Clinton High School was to permit the discussion of radical ideas in the class rooms, even of socialism itself, his only provision being that there should be an opportunity for both sides to be presented."

The second of the "two lines of consideration" which Dr. Linville regards as necessary to a correct interpretation of the "critical situation in the educational system" is the whole system on which the city schools are organized. As head of the Teachers' Union, which is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, Dr. Linville joins present opposition to the action of the Board of Education, in the matter of national loyalty, with other and more general opposition to methods of administration in the schools.

The Federation of Teachers' Associations is planning a loyalty mass meeting, to demonstrate the position of the great majority of teachers. As for teachers whose loyalty is "qualified," John W. Rafferty, President of the Federation, says they must be put out of the school.

Rich Indian Picks Hearse Automobile

THE Osage Indians look upon Wah-pah-sha-sah as a mighty man, for he has become the richest member of the tribe, more than a millionaire. With Machet-seh, Chief of the Osages, he lives near Bartlesville, Okla., in a house, having discarded tent life for good. The land which Wah-pah-sha-sah received from the Government, when the Osage tract was divided up individually, proved valuable in oil. Company after company offered the Indian large prices for the land, but he refused all offers until last Summer a Chicago concern succeeded in leasing it for $1,000,000, for a term of ten years. After receiving the money, Wah-pah-sha-sah went to Kansas to deposit it. While there, the Indian millionaire visited an automobile manufactory to purchase a car, to be the finest, he said, that money could buy.

After looking over many cars, Wah-pah-sha-sah would always turn again to a large automobile hearse. He seemed to like that better than any of the other cars; it was different from those his Bartlesville neighbors used; it had fine curtains on the sides; it had ample squatting room; it, too, cost more than the others. All these were inducements to buy, for no Indian in all Oklahoma loves his squaw and children more than does Wah-pah-sha-sah.

When others in the party shook their heads, Wah-pah-sha-sah simply repeated that he knew what he wanted, what would be comfortable for his family, and so paid for the hearse automobile. He hired a chauffeur to remain with him for a week to teach him the mysteries of running a car. The following day Wah-pah-sha-sah, his squaw, son and daughter and Chief Machet-seh, whom he had invited, entered the hearse car and squatted themselves in it, all looking very important. The happy father took his place at the chauffeur's side in order to take his first lesson in running the car.

It is needless to say that the strange occupants attracted attention wherever they appeared. At first Wah-pah-sha-sah enjoyed it, thinking that everybody gazed upon them on account of his new and expensive car. But each succeeding day, when the crowds became denser and the laughter louder, it began to dawn upon him that something was wrong. On the third day it was almost an impossibility for the chauffeur to push his way through the mass of curious spectators—many had come from neighboring towns.

Finally, Wah-pah-sha-sah was convinced that what people told him was true—that the car with the comfortable squatting facilities was intended only for the dead. He does not yet quite understand why, but has become resigned. Now almost any day he and the members of his family may be seen going about Bartlesville in a handsome touring car.

Food Conservation.

"Did you ever think that food conservation existed in Mother Goose's day?" a caller asked us yesterday.

We hadn't thought of it.

"Yes," said he. "You know the rhyme about the bag of pudding the Queen made and stuffed with plums and how

The King and Queen did eat thereof
And noblemen beside;
And what they did not eat that night
The Queen next morning fried.

"No waste there," concluded our caller.—Portland Press.

POSTPONING PAYMENTS OF SOLDIERS' DEBTS

Moratory Laws in Other Warring Countries and Prospects of Similar Legislation Throughout the United States

By PHILIP B. PERLMAN,
Assistant to the Attorney General of Maryland.

LEGISLATION now being enacted in different parts of the country postponing the operation of various civil proceedings and statutes of limitations in behalf of those absent in the military or naval service originated in what are known as moratory laws.

When Germany suddenly flung her armies east and west on unprepared Europe the financial systems of the countries drawn into the conflict were put out of commission. The shock of war ended credits for the time being and made it impossible for enterprises, large and small, to finance themselves. Many important institutions were saved from disaster by the immediate declaration of moratoriums, extending the period of payment for specified times. Other moratoriums were subsequently declared until credits were re-established and laws to meet the new conditions were placed on the statute books.

A moratory law has been defined as "a law passed in times of emergency postponing for a specified time the due date of bills of exchange and other obligations." The delay, or period of grace, allowed by the law is a moratorium. There are two degrees of moratoria—a minor and a major. The minor applies only to bills of exchange, and the major includes these and all other contracts which enforce upon a debtor the liability to make money payment to a creditor at a fixed time. (49 Law Journal, 475-6.) In fact, the major includes all debts except such as may be expressly excepted. A moratorium is the delay, or period of grace, allowed by the law. Moratorium is derived from the Latin word moratorius, denoting delay.

Britain's Moratorium.

The first moratorium in England of the present war was put into effect by proclamation on Aug. 2, 1914. It applied only to bills of exchange not payable on demand. The next day, responding to the emergency, Parliament passed what is known as the Postponement of Payments act. The act was passed through all its stages on the same day, a thing which had occurred only once before in history. The other occasion resulted in the Explosives act of 1883, enacted to meet a real or supposed emergency growing out of an alleged Fenian conspiracy after the discovery of a bomb in the crypt of St. Stephen's. The Postponement of Payments act, authorizing the King by proclamation to suspend temporarily the payment of contract obligations, was, by its terms, to remain in force for six months. In the haste with which the act was drawn and passed, the proclamation already issued, and which the act attempted to confirm, was described as being dated the third day of August, when, as a matter of fact, it had been issued on the second day.

On Aug. 6, 1914, under the authority of the Postponement of Payments act, a general moratorium was proclaimed. The proclamation on that day was followed by others on Aug. 12, Sept. 3, and Sept. 30. The proclamation of Aug. 6 provided that payments due before Sept. 4 should be deemed due one month after the due date. Provision was made for the payment of 6 per cent. interest during the time of postponed payment. The exceptions to the moratorium were set out in the proclamation as follows:

1. Payment of wages or salary.
2. Payment in respect of a liability which, when incurred, did not exceed 5 pounds in amount.
3. Rates and taxes.
4. Maritime freight.
5. Payment in respect of any debt from any person resident outside the British Isles, or from any firm, company, or institution whose principal place of business is outside the British Isles, not being a debt incurred in the British Isles by a person, firm, company, or institution having a business establishment or a branch establishment in the British Isles.
6. Payment in respect of any dividend or interest payable in respect of any stocks, funds or securities (other than real or heritable securities) in which trustees are authorized to invest.
7. The liabilities of a bank of issue in respect of banknotes issued by such bank.
8. Payments to be made by or on behalf of the Government, including old-age pensions.
9. Payments made by persons or societies in pursuance of the National Insurance act, 1911.
10. Benefits under the Workmen's Compensation act.
11. Payments in respect of the withdrawal of deposits by depositors in trustee savings banks.

Some controversy arose over the construction of the provision in the proclamation of Aug. 6 to the effect that the general moratorium should not apply to "any payment in respect of a liability which, when incurred, did not exceed 5 pounds in amount." General approval was at first given to decision that when the debt sued for was made up of a series of items in one running account, it could not be split up into separate items for the purpose of avoiding the provisions of the proclamation.

Lords Justices' Decision.

The Lords Justices, however, decided unanimously on appeal that the words of exception must be read according to their natural meaning, and could not be interpreted so as to apply to a liability exceeding 5 pounds "being an aggregate of a number of liabilities each of which when incurred was less than 5 pounds." The conclusion was, therefore, that all such actions should have been allowed to proceed.

The authority given to the Crown to authorize the postponement of contract obligations was found inadequate to meet the needs of those entering upon military service, since no provision had been made to take care of judgment debts, distraints for rent, foreclosures, and other such remedies. The need of further legislation was made clear by instructions issued in the latter part of August, 1914, to Registrars and High Bailiffs, wherein it was provided that no judgment was to be signed on a default summons "where notice of intention to defend is not given, if it appears by the particulars that the claim comes within his Majesty's proclamations, or either of them. If on any such summons judgment has already been signed, no execution shall issue in respect thereof except by leave of the Registrar. Judgment debts are not within the proclamations, which are limited to contract debts, but no execution should be levied or order of commitment executed if it can be avoided."

By what is known as the Courts (Emergency Powers) act, passed on Aug. 31, 1914, the postponement of many additional classes of obligations was provided for. The act left it within the absolute discretion of the courts to determine, upon application, whether the operation of the remedies named should be deferred or allowed to proceed.

The essential features of the Courts (Emergency Powers) act and the rules adopted in pursuance of its provisions may be summarized as follows, (49 Law Journal, 531:)

No judgment of any court, no right of distress for rent or for re-entry, and no power to foreclose or realize any security will be enforceable without a special application for a Judge's leave, on which the debtor may show cause why there should be a postponement of payment.

Wherever the subject matter does not exceed £100 the application is to be made to a County Court Judge. In case under £5 the Registrar of the Court may exercise discretion.

Debtors against whom default summonses are taken out are not entitled to any postponement of judgment unless (1) they have previously given notice of defense, or (2) already have obtained leave to defend.

Judge Cullen of New York, in arbitrating the case of Lazard Frères and L. Vogelstein & Co., was called on to deal with the effect of the English moratorium in this country. Vogelstein & Co. had borrowed from Lazard Frères bills of exchange under a contract wherein they agreed with the lenders of the bills to settle at least three days prior to their maturity in London "at your rates of exchange in London." Judge Cullen decided that although the contract between the parties was a New York contract, the time of maturity of the bills was affected by the moratoria. In the opinion of the learned Judge the effect of the moratoria was to leave it optional with the acceptors whether to avail themselves of the extension of credit. The acceptors having paid the bills at the time when they matured according to their terms, it was held that Vogelstein & Co. were bound to make settlement at the rate of exchange which prevailed at the time when demand for payment was made by Lazard Frères.

Laws in France.

The measures taken in France during the early days of the war to save the country's credit system were superseded by the ordinance of Aug. 9, 1914, providing for a thirty-day moratorium. Extensions were made by subsequent decrees. Under the law of Aug. 5, 1914, it was provided that until the cessation of hostilities no proceedings might be instituted or executions take place against persons in active military or naval service. Provision was made for the suspension of the statutes of limitations and of many judicial proceedings. Among the ordinances deferring claims was one (Sept. 27, 1914) dealing with Stock Exchange transactions entered into before Aug. 4. Interest at the rate of 5 per cent. was allowed during the period of postponement. Provision was made for delaying the redemption of bonds by French companies and municipal corporations.

Germany did not declare a general moratorium at the outbreak of the war, but a number of ordinances dealing with particular subjects were passed during August, 1914. These were added to later as the exigencies of the occasions required. The ordinance of Aug. 7 provided that no suit could be instituted before Oct. 31, 1914, in respect of a claim due to any person or corporation domiciled in a foreign country. Later ordinances extended the period of delay. Other of the ordinances empowered the courts to stay executions and to order business to be carried on, in cases where bankruptcy petitions were filed, under the supervision of the court, in lieu of bankruptcy. Bills of exchange drawn in foreign countries and made payable within the German Empire were extended from time to time.

The provisions of this nature adopted in Germany did not apply to Belgium.

The moratorium proclaimed under the Belgian Government was extended by the Germans. An ordinance of the King of the Belgians provides that in all territory subject to the jurisdiction of Belgium, obligations entered into before Feb. 1, 1915, shall not become due and payable before the end of the war. (C. H. Huberich in 47 Chicago Legal News, 400.)

Special Privileges in Germany.

Germany passed a law on Aug. 4, 1914, granting special privileges to persons in active service. It was based on a similar statute enacted June 21, 1870, at the beginning of the Franco-Prussian war.

Canada, too, has adopted laws framed along the general lines of the English Courts (Emergency Powers) act, and similar provisions are now in effect in practically all of the nations which have been at war for any length of time.

No moratoriums were needed when the United States went to war for the reason that the country was financially already on a war basis. There was no unexpected blow, disarranging markets and wiping out credits. The country's business men, having knowledge of the international situation, were prepared. And so nothing untoward happened. But the raising of armies, the concentration of military forces in cantonments in preparation for service abroad, and the heavy recruiting of naval forces have created conditions requiring that the States adopt laws to protect the interests of those in service.

One of the first States to put measures on its statute books designed to fill this need was Maryland. During the special session of the Legislature last June, Attorney General Albert C. Ritchie submitted bills drafted by him after his department had made a careful study of the legislation in force in the belligerent nations. The bills, with some few amendments, were enacted into law. Other States have been sending to Maryland recently for copies of those laws, and many of the measures yet to be adopted will doubtless be patterned after those drawn by Attorney General Ritchie.

One of the Maryland laws (Chapter 19, of the Acts of 1917) provides that "if any citizen of this State entitled to institute or bring any action, suit, or proceeding in this State, is unable during the continuance of the present war to institute or bring the same within the time limited therefor by the laws of this State, because of absence from this State in the military or naval service of the United States, such person shall not on that account be barred, but shall be entitled to institute or bring such action, suit, or proceeding within six months after the removal of such disability; otherwise the same shall be barred." It is also provided that "in the case of the death or insanity of any such person while so absent from this State, such action, suit, or proceeding may be brought by his personal representatives, if maintainable by them, within the time limited therefor by the laws of this State, except that the right of such personal representatives to maintain such action, suit, or proceeding shall in no event be barred before the expiration of one year from such death or insanity."

Provisions in Maryland Law.

Chapter 22 of the Acts of 1917 provides that "all civil causes and proceedings, whether at law or in equity, which may be pending at the time this act takes effect, or which may hereafter be instituted during the continuance of the present war, by or against any person in the National Guard or Naval Militia, or in the Maryland State Guard while on active service, or in the military or naval service of the United States, shall be suspended and stayed upon the application of such person, or his representative or attorney, provided:

a. The court to which such application is made shall find that such person is unable to prosecute, answer, or defend such cause or proceedings or to be present at the hearing or trial thereof, by reason of his service as aforesaid, and that the interest of justice requires such suspension or stay; and provided, further, that:

b. Such person, or his representative or attorney, shall comply with such conditions, as to the giving of bond or other security or undertaking, or as to the making of any deposit, or as to any other matters or things, which the said court may deem proper to impose as conditions of such suspension or stay.

Section 2 of the act provides that "any suspension or stay granted under the terms of this act may be for such period of time as the court granting the same shall deem proper, but in no event for a period longer than the duration of the present war and six months thereafter; and upon the termination of any period so fixed by the court, such suspension or stay, if not continued or renewed, shall cease, and thereafter the cause or proceedings so suspended may proceed as if there had been no suspension or stay therein, but subject, however, to any reasonable conditions which the court may deem proper to impose in the interests of justice."

The court in which any cause or proceedings may be thus suspended or stayed has the power, in its discretion, to rescind such suspension or stay at any time that it deems that the interests of justice would be subserved. The rescission is to be predicated upon such notice by service upon each person interested, or his attorney or representative, or by publication, as the court may deem proper. Thereafter the cause or proceedings may proceed as if there had been no suspension or stay, but subject, however, to any conditions which the court may impose as incident to the rescission.

a. The recovery of rent.
b. The recovery of wages or salary.
c. Moneys due in any trust or fiduciary capacity.

The law also does not apply to any case in which the court believes that any person within its terms has become engaged in any of the services described therein because of the pendency or institution of the cause or proceedings sought to be suspended or stayed.

Suspension of judgments, foreclosures, &c., were provided for by Chapter 23 of the Acts of 1917. The first section of that law provides that "the execution or enforcement of any judgment, order, or decree of any kind, whether in law or in equity, and whether in personam or in rem, and of any levy, right of entry or foreclosure, lien, power of sale, forfeiture or default which may hereafter be entered or rendered or which may exist or arise during the continuance of the present war, may be suspended or stayed, upon application by or on behalf of any person against whom or against whose legal or equitable interest in any property, real or personal, the same may be executed or enforced, provided the court to which such application is made shall find that such person so liable or interested is unable, by reason of circumstances directly attributable to the present war, to make whatever payment or satisfaction may be necessary in order to satisfy, release or discharge such judgment, order or decree, or other power or right as aforesaid."

The other provisions are similar to those contained in Chapter 22. Both of these laws contain a provision that no rights or powers shall be suspended unless the court deems such action is necessary for the proper protection of the interests of any person entitled to the benefits provided for. When the bills were introduced in the Legislature they contained clauses including the "recovery of taxes, assessments, or other public dues, duties, imposts, or charges of any and every kind"-among the things to which they did not apply. The Legislature, however, struck those clauses out, and the only exceptions are those named above.

It is proper, of course, that those staying at home should bear the burden of the delay allowed the soldiers and sailors to pay their bills, and it is safe to predict that, unless peace comes soon, laws similar to those in Maryland and elsewhere will be in force in every State in the Union.

NOVEL CASES IN THE COURTS

Section 27 of the National Defense act of June 3, 1916 (Fed. Stat. Ann. Pamph. Supp. No. 7, p. 63,) provides that no person under the age of 18 years shall be enlisted or mustered into the military service of the United States without the written consent of his parents or guardians, provided that he has such parents or guardians entitled to his custody or control. The parents of an infant under the age of 18 who had enlisted filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus for his release. In the return to the writ it was alleged that the infant was being held by the military authorities to answer the charge of fraudulent enlistment and receiving allowances and rations. In denying the writ and discussing the right of the parent to the discharge of his son the court in Hoskins agt. Dickerson, 239 Fed. 275, reported and annotated in Ann. Cas. 1917C 776, said:

When the petition for the writ of habeas corpus was filed the petitioner's son was in the custody of the military authorities. A court-martial is the proper tribunal to try him for a military offense charged to have been committed by him while his enlistment was effective to the extent of subjecting him to military control and discipline. The election by the father, evidenced by the writ of habeas corpus, to avoid his son's enlistment terminated the right of the military authorities to detain the latter under the enlistment. But it did not terminate the right of such authorities to continue their custody of the minor for the time reasonably required for the exercise of the military jurisdiction brought into play by duly made charges of the commission of military offenses by the minor while he was a soldier.

In Ledyard against Ten Eyck, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 102, a case involving the title to the bed of a lake, Campbell, J., put the following question: "How does the State hold the title where it has sold and conveyed away all the land bounded by the lake or river, and where the riparian proprietors stand face to face with their feet touching the outer edge of the water?"

"Though we affirm, we condemn practically everything that was done below," said the Iowa Supreme Court, in the case of In re Bagnola, 100 N. W. Rep. 228.

NOT A CAT PRODUCT.

Violin Strings Are Made from the Intestines of Sheep.

Where's the cat farm from which we get our supply of catgut? The answer is, There isn't any cat farm. Cats' intestines can't be profitably utilized. If not cats, then what furnishes the raw materials for musical instruments and tennis strings? The answer is, Sheep. Every part of the animal is utilized, even the soft and mellow tones of his bleating voice, which are preserved in the intestines that string the tuneful violin.

As soon as the sheep intestines are graded, says Popular Science Monthly, they are divided into narrows about eight yards in length. These are sent to the string factory, where they are thoroughly cleansed and chemically treated. It takes from twenty to twenty-four sheep to produce the strings for one tennis racket. A single violin string monopolizes the entrails of a whole sheep, however big.

After the gut is split by running it over a safety razor blade, the strands go through another machine which removes impurities. Following this they are repeatedly run through wringers on washtubs. From four to fifteen of these strands are used for one music string, being spun into strings, twisted, and polished off with emery paper.—Milwaukee Journal.

Severe Test.

Perhaps no test of one's poise and manual dexterity is more difficult for a man of sedentary and intellectual pursuits than the effort to pick up seven or eight newly released watermelon seeds from the tablecloth with his left hand without arousing so much as a passing suspicion in his wife's breast that they're there at all.—Ohio State Journal.

The Duo-Art Piano taking Harold Bauer's place as Soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra, Walter Damrosch, Conductor, in a Concert given at Aeolian Hall, Saturday Evening, November 17th, 1917

A NOTABLE PRESENTATION OF A NOTABLE INSTRUMENT

On Saturday Evening, November Seventeenth, a concert was given at Aeolian Hall which, in certain aspects, was the most important in the history of music. At this concert a Grand pianoforte, actuated by a current of electricity—played by a perforated music-roll and untouched by human hands—performed Harold Bauer's interpretation of the Saint Saens Concerto in G Minor.

The fact that this achievement was attained upon the concert platform in conjunction with the New York Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Walter Damrosch, establishes beyond doubt the musical standing of the Duo-Art Piano.

An imposing audience, comprising famous pianists, singers, musical critics and people socially and politically prominent, listened to this extraordinary piano play the three movements of the Saint Saens Concerto—heard the difficult and complicated piano part played in perfect time and spirit with the orchestra.

At the conclusion of the number there was not one person in that great body of people but was startled with the significance of what had occurred.

Mr. Harold Bauer, at the moment presenting a concert program in Chicago, a thousand miles away, had exhibited his highest art as literally as though he sat in person at the keyboard.

His extraordinary genius transcribed upon a music-roll in the fullness of both its technique and its spirit was a present living actuality to every listener.

The Significance of This Wonderful Event

Remarkable as was this achievement—however unique in the history of music—its significance affects a field infinitely broader than the concert stage.

The Duo-Art Piano—the revolutionary instrument thus formally presented to the public under such imposing auspices—has a mission of vital import to the world at large. The incomparable art displayed in the playing of this instrument, an art so true as to have won the admiration and support of many musical artists and educators of the highest distinction, is destined for the enjoyment of many rather than few.

It is as the piano of intimate home environment that the supreme value of the Duo-Art is to be realized. It is to bring just such music as thrilled the audience at Aeolian Hall, directly to the fire-side, that this great invention was designed.

What the Newspaper Critics said of this event:

NEW YORK AMERICAN

"It must be confessed that Mr. Bauer himself might have been sitting at the key-board, so extraordinarily faithful to the original—so photographically correct, one might say—were every shade of expression, every nuance and accent in the reproduction.

"A large audience, made up of men and women distinguished in the world of music, watched the proceedings with amazement."

SUNDAY-TELEGRAM

"The piano part was played by the unseen hands of Harold Bauer on a Duo-Art Piano. The effect was uncanny. The music was played with every gradation of Mr. Bauer's art.

"At the conclusion there could be no doubt of the success of the experiment. The reproduction of Mr. Bauer's work was as full of delightful nuance as if the virtuoso himself was seated there."

NEW YORK TIMES

"Instead of a pianist, the concerto was played by the Duo-Art roll in a grand piano. It was a reproduction of Mr. Harold Bauer's interpretation of Saint-Saens' G Minor Concerto. Mr. Damrosch followed it as he would a player of flesh and blood."

NEW YORK TRIBUNE

"It was really a remarkable performance, the coordination between orchestra and instrument being perfect, while it took no great stretch of imagination to visualize Mr. Bauer himself at the key-board."

NEW YORK HERALD

"Mr. Damrosch and his men accompanied Mr. Bauer's interpretation just as if the soloist was present. The player and the accompanying body got along together with life-like accuracy."

TELEGRAPH

"The perfection of the solo instrument's response and the facility of Damrosch's men in accompaniment, won great applause."

EVENING MAIL

"A distinguished audience, largely composed of musicians, attended this event and showed mingled delight and amazement at the work of the mechanism.

"The record was made by Harold Bauer and represents his most refined art. Mr. Damrosch bestowed many a glance of approval upon the spiritual pianist."

EVENING WORLD

"Mr. Bauer was represented by the Duo-Art Piano, a remarkable instrument which reflected his playing to the minutest detail. It was a bit uncanny to see Mr. Damrosch directing the orchestra to the movement of keys untouched by visible fingers."

EVENING GLOBE

"The record provided a remarkable facsimile of the playing of Mr. Bauer and richly merited the recognition paid it by such a musical personage as Walter Damrosch.

"A notable audience received the performance with enthusiasm."

EVENING JOURNAL

"The affair may be well considered as having an important bearing upon the development of musical appreciation, since the playing of Mr. Bauer, so far as the ear accustomed to his style could detect, was well reproduced."

Expressions from Prominent Musicians who were there:

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER TO HAROLD BAUER WRITTEN BY WALTER DAMROSCH

".... of course we missed you and your compelling personality at the concert last night, but you would have been delighted if you had been present, to hear how cleverly the Duo-Art reproduced your artistic intentions. Unlike Edward Everett Hale's famous story, your double did not 'undo' you.

"I am living in mortal terror that the next uncanny invention from the fertile American brain will be an electrically controlled, mechanically perfect, orchestrat conductor! Then good-bye to Yours truly,"

(Signed) WALTER DAMROSCH.

"It was a pleasure to be present at the debut of the Duo-Art Piano in a Symphonetic Concert.

"The fine artistic qualities of the Duo-Art Piano were well known to me, but the performance of last Saturday night disclosed entirely new possibilities as regards the cooperation of the Duo-Art Piano with the Symphony Orchestra. This new experiment proved to be most surprisingly successful and The Aeolian Company is to be heartily congratulated on its latest achievement."

(Signed) OSSIP GABRILOWITSCH.

"It was quite a thrill to be present at last Saturday's concert and to hear that wonderful instrument, the Duo-Art, conveying Mr. Bauer's beautiful message in a manner that spelled perfection and the whole sponsored by the progressive Mr. Damrosch."

(Signed) RUDOLPH GANZ.

"It was a genuine pleasure to witness the wholly artistic accomplishment of the Duo-Art at your concert last Saturday. It was a splendid attainment.

"I shall follow the future activities of this wonderful instrument with keen interest."

(Signed) PASQUALE AMATO.

"I congratulate you most sincerely on the splendid success of your Duo-Art this last Saturday at Aeolian Hall. I recognize your product of human ingenuity is bound to become the most perfect instrument in making pianistic art immortal.

HOW THE "TANK" WAS MADE A CONQUEROR

Official History Showing Each Step in Development of the War Machine That Smashed the Hindenburg Line.

The part played by the "tanks" in breaking the Hindenburg line has lifted them to a prominence held by no other device invented, or improved, since the war began. The airplane, the submarine, and every new weapon of the Germans, from the Zeppelin to poison gases, must yield precedence, for the time, at least, to the new type of armored cars which, upsetting precedent and prediction, last week moved their way, unaided by preliminary artillery fire, through a wide barrier of German trenches and barbed wire. This official history tells how the tank was contrived and developed by the British Government and how crews were trained to bring all its power as a fighting machine to bear on the enemy.

1—The Need of Tanks.

THE Machine Gun Corps of the British Army as constituted in October, 1915, was divided into an infantry, a cavalry, and a motor branch. Six months later a new section was formed at Bisley. The men for this new section were taken from the pick of the Derby recruits; for the junior officers two Colonels went on a voyage of discovery to cadet battalions and other units and selected promising young men with a knowledge of internal combustion engines who had given proofs of an adventurous spirit and of ability to make men move. For some time the object of the new unit remained a mystery even to those drafted into it, except so far as the qualifications required of the officers afforded an inkling.

The name given to the new organization—the Heavy Armored Section of the Motor Machine Gun Service—only deepened the mystery, as there were no signs of cars, armored or unarmored, and the only training given to the men was foot drill and machine gun practice. However, after some time spent in these occupations the Colonel in command addressed the company commanders and some other officers on parade, and after commending the spirit they had hitherto shown, bade them be of good heart, as a wonderful new car, which would astonish them all, was shortly to be issued to them for service in the field.

At last it was announced that the new car was ready. But it was not brought to the camp near Aldershot, where the section was stationed—that was far too much in the public eye. A site had been chosen in a more remote part of the country; there a camp was pitched, carefully screened from inquisitive passers-by; it was surrounded by fences and guarded by sentries posted at intervals of 100 yards, with orders to admit no one who was not furnished with a special pass. Companies of the Armored Car Section, as soon as their preliminary training was completed, were successively drafted to this camp to become familiarized with their weapon of destruction.

The new armored car concealed in this lair certainly had all the promised elements of surprise. At first sight it appeared little more than a huge shapeless bulk of metal. It was said to weigh some forty tons, was armor-plated all over, with tiny spyholes at intervals, from some of which peeped out murderous-looking gun muzzles, and had no visible means of progression except two small motor wheels attached like a tail behind. The wheels behind were found to act only as a rudder to direct its course, the propulsive force coming from some internal and invisible wheels that traveled over long endless metal tracks, extending in an elliptical shape from the snout to the rump and moving forward as the creature advanced. The pace at which this strange object moved was slow—barely three miles an hour. The first company of the Heavy Armored Car Section were delighted with the spectacle of the creature intrusted to their care, and promptly adopted the name "Big Willie," with which their new pet had previously been christened. The two next of the same breed to come in were called "Little Willie" and "Mother."

In the Autumn of 1914, when the opponents had settled down to trench warfare, it became obvious that some means of parrying the danger of well-directed and well-protected machine gun fire from the German trenches must be discovered if our infantry were to carry out assaults with success. The idea of a self-propelled armored car which could move unscathed over unprotected ground, could crush down wire entanglements, and carry guns with a crew to work them, occurred to several people both in the army and the navy. Such an engine, recalling the turris mobilis of Livy and the belfroi of the Middle Ages would not only be able to tackle troublesome machine guns in the German trenches, but would also help to clear a way through barbed wire obstacles for the infantry.

2—The Evolution of the Tank.

Even before this war the development of the caterpillar tractor had suggested to a few far-sighted people the possibility of evolving from this invention a machine capable of offensive use over rough country in close warfare.

Among the earliest of the more practical suggestions was one by Colonel Swinton, the first commanding officer of the "Heavy Section," in October, 1914, to build armored cars on the Holt tractor system, an American invention, or on a similar caterpillar principle, to smash through wire entanglements and climb trenches. This idea was subsequently referred to the Committee of Imperial Defense and the War Office, and experiments with various tractors were made on behalf of the War Office, for some time without practical result. In the meantime a similar idea had occurred to officers in the Royal Naval Air Service, and Mr. Churchill, then First Lord, took it up warmly.

When in June, 1915, the Commander in Chief in France sent in a memorandum urging an exhaustive examination of the question, two State departments chiefly concerned had the matter well in hand. Moreover, the Ministry of Munitions, which had recently been established, was also considering the matter. To this committee the War Office laid down the conditions which had to be fulfilled by the car. It should be able to climb a five-foot parapet and cross a ten-foot ditch; in weight and width it had to conform to the measurements of standard War Office bridges and to railway transportation requirements, and it must not be too high, for reasons of visibility to the enemy; it must be protected against close-range rifle and machine-gun fire, and it must be able to destroy machine-gun emplacements. It was agreed, however, that the first experimental work should be left in the hands of the Admiralty Committee.

A year was spent by the Admiralty Committee in researches and experiments before a satisfactory machine was designed and constructed. Finally, from among the numerous types of tractors inspected the most satisfactory was found to be a caterpillar tractor with an endless self-laid track, over which internal driving wheels could be propelled by the engines.

The construction of these new engines of warfare was still necessarily a slow business. Improvements were continually being adopted, which necessitated changes in the original designs, and men had to be specially trained in the factories for the work required. It was not, therefore, as we have seen, till about July, 1916, that the first consignment arrived at the secret manoeuvre ground to meet the personnel which was to use them.

The new machines, as delivered at the secret camp, were found to be of two slightly different designs. One, called the male, was armed with two Hotchkiss quick fire guns, with a subsidiary armament of some machine guns. These were especially designed for dealing at close quarters with the concrete emplacements for the German machine guns. The other type, called the female, was armed only with machine guns, and was more suitable for dealing with machine gun personnel and riflemen than with the emplacements.

The members of the Heavy Section of the Machine Gun Corps after arriving at their camp had a good deal of work in front of them before they could hope to take their tanks on active service. They had to learn how to drive and steer them, to repair them, and to fire off their guns when boxed up within their narrow compass; they even had to learn how to live at all inside them. Imagine a narrow cabin some 9 or 10 feet wide, 13 feet long and 4 feet high into which had to be crammed an engine of over 100 horsepower, two guns, and three or four machine guns, provisions for three days, ammunition and equipment, besides a crew of several men. The noise made by the engine made it impossible to hear an order, consequently every communication had to be made by signs; the armor plating was so effective that one could only see for steering or for aiming the guns through the narrowest chinks; the motion, too, of the tank over rough ground was not unlike that of a ship in a heavy sea, and this motion, combined with the smell of oil, the close atmosphere, the heat and the noise, was at first apt to induce the same symptoms as sometimes afflict those uninured to sea-voyages.

In spite of all these difficulties, so great was the zeal displayed that at the end of July, 1916, it was possible to hold two exhibition combats with tanks over the trench system prepared, one before General Staff officers, the other before the King. These exhibitions showed that the tanks answered the purposes for which they had been designed, and orders were given for them to be made ready for France. At the end of August fifty tanks were loaded at night on the railway at the camp's private siding and sent off to France with all due precaution for secrecy. They were landed at Havre on Aug. 29 and went up to the front, some by road, others by railway.

The tanks sent over were painted all over for the purpose of concealment with weird colors which added to their grotesque appearance. They were also given fancy names by the men, sometimes illustrated by rough heraldic emblems on the body. Among the names given were: His Majesty's Landships Cyclops, Chaos, Café au Lait, Champagne, Cordon Rouge, Chartreuse, Chablis, Cognac, Curaçoa, and Crème de Menthe. There was an H. M. L. S. Dreadnought, a Daredevil, and a Deadwood Dick.

3—Tanks in Action.

When the tanks arrived at the front they were naturally objects of wonder to all who were privileged to see them. Detachments of tanks were assigned to the army commander then engaged in the continuation of the Somme offensive. On Sept. 15 they were let loose for the test of battle.

The new offensive, which began on Sept. 15, was a continuation of the great battle of the Somme that had started in the previous July. The object of this offensive was to drive the Germans out of high ground running east and south of Thiepval, from which they could enfilade our newly gained positions. The Germans were strongly intrenched, and had hundreds of gigantic wasps' nests scattered about in the shape of strong concrete emplacements for machine guns. Bitter experience had taught our generals that a successful advance under cover of our artillery barrage into the first line trenches was too often doomed to be hung up by the concerted fire from these wasps' nests, which could not be reached by our infantry. The chief business of the tanks was to help our infantry by destroying these nests.

Sept. 15 was a misty morning and comparatively few of our troops saw the long line of tanks which the night before had been comfortably parked in a secluded valley, deploying into battle position. But when the mists rose and the tanks appeared to friend and foe in all their grotesque uncouthness, the effect was as exhilarating to us as it was dumbfounding to the Germans.

When the Germans had recovered their senses sufficiently they directed all the available rifle and machine-gun fire upon them. But the tanks did not mind. A war correspondent, describing the scene, says: "Nothing could stop them. They waddled on, turning neither to the right nor to the left, and walked straight into the midst of factory ruins."

One tank in another part of the field was in action for twenty consecutive hours. Another, getting well ahead of the infantry, on finding itself alone, turned back to see what had become of its human companions. They were found to be held up by a machine-gun emplacement full of Germans, so the tank obligingly sat on the emplacement, shot down the Germans, and led the men on to further victories.

It must not, however, be imagined that the proceedings of the tanks were quite as amusing to those inside as they appeared to the British infantry, who had barbed wire leveled for them and machine gun emplacements crushed as they advanced. The cramped quarters, the head-splitting noise, and the difficulty of ascertaining what was going on outside made the lives of the tank crew anything but agreeable in battle. Their periscopes were apt to be shot away; the steering gear, never easy, became almost impossible. The mere manual labor of moving the levers of the engines and turning apparatus was enormous, especially in these early machines. The crew had difficulty in communicating with the outside world, and had to rely chiefly on two carrier pigeons taken with them on the voyage; as for communication with them by the outside world, this was even harder. The tank, indeed, proved to be an admirable protection against ordinary rifle bullets.

Even when the tanks themselves were knocked out this was not necessarily fatal to the crews, who often managed to escape, and the casualties were small in proportion to the number of tanks put out of action. Those who inaugurated tank tactics in this first battle deserve all the credit they can receive.

Once having proved their value the tanks came to stay. Later in the year tanks were sent out to Egypt and were in action at Gaza. In November they were used again in France. Meanwhile more and more tanks were being constructed and an increasing personnel to form the crews and the repair sections were being trained in England. After the first success in France the growing importance of the organization was emphasized by a change of title from "Heavy Section" to "Heavy Branch of the Machine Gun Corps." Finally in July, 1917, the growing size and importance of the tanks organization justified the Army Council in entirely separating it from the Machine Gun Corps and establishing it as a special Tank Corps by itself under a Director General.

In France the tanks have been in action in successively increasing numbers at each attack delivered on a large scale. At Arras in April, at Messines in June, and at the third battle of Ypres in August they have continued their valuable work. They naturally have not enjoyed the advantages of surprise, so useful in their first engagement, and it could not be expected that a vigilant enemy like the Germans would not contrive countermeasures. They have now established special observers and airplanes to watch for tanks and signal their appearance, and guns both in the rear and in the trenches to deal with them. Armor-piercing bullets are served out to their riflemen and machine gunners for use at close quarters, and elaborately concealed tank traps are prepared to engulf the monsters.

It is hardly possible yet to allocate all the credit for the hard and persistent work carried out by the pioneers of this corps. But even if they cannot yet be named, they have the satisfaction of having helped to save the lives of hundreds of brave men, and perhaps to have brought nearer the final victory. It has been truly said that we were first this time in inventing a new engine of war, an engine at once effective and at the same time, unlike so many of the German inventions, transgressing none of the hitherto accepted conventions of war.

BROKER WHO WEAVES CHILDREN'S STORIES

David Cory Leads a Dual Life, Bending Over a Ticker and Writing About Animals That Talk.

HOW does it feel to lead the dual existence of a prosperous Wall Street broker and popular author of children's stories? That's the question which David Cory's friends put to him continually. He has been plugging along at his brokerage business for eighteen years, with success. He writes a story every day or so. He could live comfortably on either brokerage or writing. It is hard to tell which interests him most. He is all excited about the stock market from 9:30 in the morning until 4:30 in the afternoon. Then goes home and becomes the creator of scores of little animal characters that have appealed to American and British children for the last six years.

"It's simple," said Mr. Cory, when he was asked about it for an interview. "Long, long before I began to write for publication—in fact, all my life—I had been thinking and dreaming stories. Writing to me is instinctive. During the time I am a business man I do not even remember I am an author. The market is too exciting. But when I begin to write I am as oblivious to the broker half of me as if I had never seen a loan blank or ticker.

"My children are really the cause of my being an author," he added.

As a child he attended school in Englewood, N. J., and, when there were compositions to write, his was usually about the animals of the forest. When he went to work as a broker he had little time for writing. But after his two children grew big enough to be interesting to him, and to understand, he began to tell them stories. A robin flying by the window, an eddy of snowflakes, or a shrub in the yard would provide the inspiration for a story.

"Oh, yes," he would say, when they asked for a tale, "this morning Lady Robin came to my window, fresh from the 'Friendly Forest,' or 'This morning, oh, so early, little Miss Southwind, blown to our city in a cloud of snowflakes, told me she had visited the 'Friendly Forest' last night." And then the story would unravel itself, until the quaint little animals, each endowed with a name and personality, would array themselves in the minds of the children, and the end would come when "Mr. Luck Lefthindfoot" would stop his "Luckymobile" to let pass a chain of busy ants on their way to school.

The stories continued to pile up in the little boys' minds, and they asked their father to copy them all in a book, so they could remember from time to time what had happened before. After a number of the stories had been copied the children tied the pages into little pamphlets and decorated them with crayon pictures of the rabbits and foxes. The books were passed among and borrowed by their playmates until they were almost worn out.

A friend suggested to Mr. Cory that he was selfish to give his stories only to his own children. The author took fourteen stories to an editor, who bought them forthwith. Although he writes only in the evening and on Sundays and holidays, he has published seven books and written a story a day for six years. In the last year and a half he has written more than 500,000 words.

"Children's stories are unlike anything else," said Mr. Cory, who also writes verses and stories for grown-ups. "To interest a child you must put yourself on his level. You must see things from his perspective. Have the characters quaint, but never have them do impossible things that the child cannot imagine himself doing. A child believes it is perfectly natural for an animal to do anything he himself can do, and a child is no exception to the rule that it is human nature to love mystery. That is why they delight in queer little doors at the root of a tree, underground passages under the bed of a creek, and cities of small animals that they themselves cannot even see. The hero must sword. They want characters with distinctiveness. That child characteristic has made my 'Mr. Lucky Lefthindfoot,' better known to the children as 'Uncle Lucky,' a very popular character. 'Uncle Lucky' is a venerable gentleman rabbit who wears an old wedding stovepipe hat and a polka-dot handkerchief.

"Where in stories for older people repetition would be dangerous, it is necessary for children. When you are writing for them you must imagine them continually asking, 'Is Uncle Lucky the old rabbit with the high stovepipe hat?' or 'Is Daddy Fox the papa of Bushytail and Slyboots?' So these details must be told over and over. I have a way of bringing them in by saying, 'Oh, yes, you will remember Daddy Fox was just going out to get some food for his two little boys, Bushytail and Slyboots,' which establishes the character anew in the child's mind.

"When telling children stories, one must be very friendly and familiar with them. It is a 'come and sit at my knee' and a 'come back and I'll tell you another one' proposition. There are characteristics which children will accept and love in animals if those attributes are such that they can observe them in human beings."

Children easily recognize good and bad, according to Mr. Cory. So by contrast he makes his lovable characters more nearly perfect by giving them enemies in the "Friendly Forest," among whom are "Daddy Fox," "Old Man Weasel," "Mr. Hawk," and others. Beauty is another feature necessary to children's stories, and beauty he shows in action-description and with verse. When "Billy Bunny," the leading character of his most recent book, oversleeps, his mother sends him to the "Three-in-One Cent" store to buy an alarm clock. The one he selects sings musically:

Awake, for the morning-glories are wet with the sparkling dew;
Awake, for Happy Sun is shining a merry welcome to you.
Don't linger a moment longer, jump out of your warm little bed.
Wash your hands and your face, and tidy the hair on your towsled head.

This is his manner of breaking the monotony of prose, which, he says, is apt to become depressing to very small children. Then, too, he finds that the stories remain longer in the minds of the young folk if a verse is dropped in to be memorized. One little girl wrote him recently that she had memorized a verse of his, and would be kinder to animals after learning what poor tramp Yellow dog said as he came to "Uncle Lucky's" house:

Tramp, tramp, tramp, I've been tramping all the day,
And I'm very, very tired, and my coat with dust is gray,
And I'm thirsty and I'm hungry, and a little lonely, too,
For though I am a Yellowdog, I'm feeling awful blue.

"There are a lot of things to be remembered if one is to entertain children successfully with stories," continued Mr. Cory. "They love dramatic effects, and because of this, and their demand for detail, it is necessary to have an elaborate background for the characters in their stories. I open one story with, first, a setting like a stage in old Snake Fence Corner,' near the brier patch, near by the 'Friendly Forest.' Adown the path through the 'Friendly Forest' the child, reading, can see his old friends, Squirrel Nuteracker, Little Beaver, Tommy Turtle, Old Uncle Bullfrog with his white waistcoat—all well described. I learned all of these things by observing my own children and other ones to whom I tell stories.

"I shall not attempt to keep up with my boys and write for them any more. When they were small they were interested in my stories and learned them by heart, but now I am glad to see that they are outgrowing them and that each has his own personality and activities. I would not want them to be just an echo of me. However, both of the boys are showing literary inclinations.

ONE WHO FAILED AT PLATTSBURG

Lost a $12,000 Job, But Finds Himself a Better Man Mentally, Spiritually, and Physically.

By an Unsuccessful Candidate.

I AM not going to get a commission here. When the lists are printed I shall be among those missing. I don't deserve a commission. If I did I would be made an officer. A man gets his due reward here at Plattsburg.

On the surface it would seem that I am simply out three months' time and a job. My job paid me $12,000 a year. I am 35, have worked hard, and been lucky in my connections. I won't get my job back. My successor is too firmly established. Besides, it wouldn't be fair for me to try to force him out. I've always tried to be fair. After three months of Plattsburg I couldn't help being fair.

Colonel J. A. Baer, our Adjutant, told us the other day that no man who failed to get his commission should feel disgraced.

"Not every man, no matter how brave and patriotic he is, can demonstrate military ability, any more than every man can be a surgeon or a theologian. You will all be graduates of this training camp, with due reason to be proud," said he.

Not only should we be proud, we should be grateful. Furthermore, every friend or relative of a man who goes through this camp, commission or no commission, should be proud and grateful, for further to quote Colonel Baer: "Every man who came to Plattsburg was ready to be of service and has been of service."

For our material losses, time, and money, we have received manifold compensation. Many a gilded youth has had $50,000 lavished on an education that didn't make him a man. Colonel Paul Wolf and Colonel Baer have been running the finest military school in the country next to West Point, but first of all they have been conducting a school for men.

What shall we do, those of us who have failed? Some of us will enlist, and, with our training here to aid us, overcome our deficiencies and be officers yet. Some will take civilian "war jobs." Others will go about fulfilling their civil and family obligations. The duty of citizenship was never stronger than it is now. Those who go back to civil life will have an immense advantage over their competitors. I believe Plattsburg has added ten years to my natural life. I know that it has put twenty-four hours more into each day. I now function fully, mentally, spiritually, physically for the first time in my life. I can accomplish steadily twice as much as I could before I came here. This may sound like exaggeration. Just remember that we have been tempered here in a furnace under constant forced draft, the useless burned away, the strengthened metal left.

Furthermore, everything I write about this camp and its benefits I have weighed and investigated. I have been trained to pick flaws and to voice complaints. Before Roosevelt put the word "muckraker" into the language, I was tearing a Southwestern town wide open with investigations and exposés. In college I narrowly missed expulsion because of a knack to excoriate with the written word. I was editing a university publication. Largely for the sake of the well-knit pointed paragraph, I gleefully wrote editorials that regularly caused meetings of the Board of Trustees. Now I know an exposé of Plattsburg would find a ready market in one of several anti-Administration publications, but there isn't anything to expose. I can't, for the life of me find anything to complain about here. Nor can the candidates. No grouch can live in a man breathing Lake Champlain air, permeated with the Plattsburg spirit. I cannot pick a single flaw in the conditions of training, healthfulness, comfort, cleanliness, or recreation here.

Many outsiders have remarked that we have too few regular officers as instructors, that the reserve officers can't possibly be thorough. They are, however. They have more than made good. All respect to the knowledge and efficiency of the regulars. It is an open question, however, if they could have done at this camp what the reserve officers have accomplished. Having come from civil life themselves the reserve officers understand at once the spirit and needs of the candidates who have just come from civil life, and how to get the best results with them.

Now for a somewhat detailed consideration of why those of us who get no commissions, but are nevertheless proud graduates of Plattsburg, have cause to be grateful. We have benefited profoundly under four counts—physically, spiritually, mentally, and socially.

Our bodies have been made stronger and better, from the soles of our feet to the crowns of our heads. No, even Plattsburg cannot cure baldness, dandruff, and stop that falling hair. But headaches have been eliminated and eyesight strengthened. I, personally, although subject in the past to periodic migraine, which sent me groping for my brown bottle of five-grain headache tablets have not had a touch of this while in camp. It's not because of not using my eyes, for we sometimes study a straight five hours. My vision has materially improved. I can now read on the test card the whole bottom line that was a blur before. Then as to feet: Hats off to the army shoe. I've some ten civilian pairs stored at my club, but I shall never wear a tight or narrow shoe again. As for digestion, it is sound and regular for the first time since my 'teens.

Like all my fellow-candidates, I have not had a drink since I came here. I haven't missed it. I'm off alcohol for good, too. Not even my favorite cocktail—half Bourbon, half Italian vermouth, no bitters—and it was not so long ago that it took three to make me really enjoy a dinner—can tempt me. Insomnia is banished. We have learned to sleep soundly from almost the instant we slip into our springless bunks, and cheerily to jump out of bed at a given minute. It used to take me forty-five minutes to dress for breakfast. I do it now in twenty, counting the shower, too. We have been taught muscular and mental coordination, and have been given endurance in no mean degree; witness our twenty-four-hour trick in the trenches in the rain, after which the men, 90 per cent. of them soaked to the skin, marched two miles home, the cadence 130 steps to the minute, and each company trying to outsing the next. Where else but Plattsburg could I have been put in such physical shape?

To live in and breathe in the Plattsburg spirit has been a privilege. It is a matter of fact spirit. I have never heard one man mention the sacrifices he made to come here. There is no talk of glory. It is a spirit of service. The fight is to keep the world worth living in. The war itself is devoid of romance, horrible beyond thought. But Plattsburg's natural beauty, the lake and the mountains, have helped keep the Plattsburg spirit high. Marching to mess these November mornings at 6, the candidate sees a chrome and crimson sunrise, and at evening a horizon bathed in rich purple, all helping him to realize that it is to preserve the appreciation of beauty of life in all its aspects that we are in the war. It was fitting that as we lay on our bellies, pumping ten rifle shots in a minute and ten seconds at cardboard semblances of German "feld grau" heads and shoulders at 300 yards, that the target range should have been framed in flaming, flaunting Autumn browns and bronzes, yellows and vermilions; back of this sharp blue ridges of the Adirondacks against white cloud banks. It made us realize that the world is too beautiful for men to permit the Hun to stamp out therein all faith and freedom, all honesty and fair dealing, all love of the truth that is beauty and the beauty that is truth.

But perhaps the most remarkable part of the Plattsburg spirit is the high moral tone of the camp. It simply isn't the thing to be a rounder here, or, what is even more surprising, to talk of having been one or of liking to be one. This is due to the influence of Colonel Wolf and Colonel Baer, and their astounding thoroughness in carrying out the orders of the Secretary of War in cleaning up Plattsburg. How they closed saloons and houses of bad reputation, how they drove out gamblers and peddlers of whiskey and bottle cocktails would make a story in itself. For when Colonel (then Captain) Baer started in to make the camp surroundings decent United States Avenue, on which the post borders, was reminiscent of old frontier days; the thoroughness with which these pitfalls were removed is an evidence of the Plattsburg spirit.

As for mental discipline, that is just what we have had here. Besides inculcating order in all things, it has given us all a mental alertness that few men can attain in four years of college. The high pressure does it. But we can stand high pressure. If I were 21, just out of college, and wanted to go into training for a big executive job in civilian life, I should want to come to a Plattsburg camp. You learn true organization here. This big camp runs more smoothly than many a single family. Remember that Colonel Wolf has the care of these 3,200 men twenty-four hours each day. He has a four years' course of military training to crowd into three months. Besides, he must feed, clothe, house the men, and keep them contented and diverted, and despite the crowded conditions maintain health and cleanliness, and, finally, keep the moral tone high. One learns here how it is done—not how to fill Colonel Wolf's job, for few other men could do what he does—but one gets insight into the job of organization, of planning and regulating and deputizing. Many a brilliant man who has failed as an executive because he could not organize and administer would pay dollars into the thousands for the training in organization which I, who have failed to get a commission, have absorbed here.

We have also learned to base our enthusiasms on fact. Bluff doesn't go in the army. In particular a man must not bluff himself, else he will hang himself. How many men in business are there, especially able salesmen and promoters, who have made a mess of things because they let their enthusiasm, their business emotions, run away with their judgment? Plattsburg would have taught them not to. We learn to think quickly and act quickly. But we learn, too, that we must have the facts beforehand, and we learn how to get them.

Socially, I have taken on stature, for I have become a better citizen, from living for three months with 130 men ranging from one of great inherited wealth and a college professor to a former traffic policeman and a whilom professional swimmer. All have taught me something. All have taught each other something. These officers' training camps are better democratizers than the national army camps, for those who take the leaven away from here possess more influence in their communities, generally, than the men from the draft camps, and will, accordingly, spread that leaven farther. Elbert Hubbard used to say that all men look alike in gym suits. Well, all men don't look alike in uniforms. Khaki brings out personality. The uniform and an ideal mode of life for all take away the adventitious advantages of birth or social connections. A man stands all by himself. The premium is on brains, and ability and the knack of judging and handling men. I am not in the premium class, but along with the others who won't get commissions I have learned a lot about men. I have learned to think more about my duty and less about my rights, and I am going away from here deep in debt to the Plattsburg training camp.

JEWISH NATION NOT WANTED IN PALESTINE

The Views of Those Who Are Opposed to Zionism Expressed by a Leading American Rabbi.

By DR. SAMUEL SCHULMAN,
In The American Hebrew.

THOUGH I am not a Zionist, I naturally rejoice that great nations are willing to do something for Jews in Palestine. The declaration of Balfour, and the reports which latterly have come from across the seas, that there is a desire to realize the hopes of many Jews with respect to Palestine, naturally stir the imagination. Those who, during the last twenty years, have declared themselves non-Zionists, and who today cannot see their way to subscribe to the Zionist platform, still maintain their principles in the presence of this great impressive fact of history. The principle for which the non-Zionists contend remains with them as their guiding ideal with reference to the destiny of the Jews scattered all over the world.

I approach this event from the point of view of Judaism as a religion. I look upon the Jewish people as a spiritual entity, as the international synagogue. I would prefer "Israel" as the name for the Jewish people, because this name brings out best to my mind the implication of the great mission of our people in the world. And it also recalls the name which, in the course of the development of Jewish thought, was given by our rabbis to our people. They called it the Keneseth Yisroel, the Congregation of Israel. As such a spiritual entity, as such a Congregation of Israel, the Jewish people has, and ought to have, a home in all lands of the world. I therefore do not like the phrase, "a home land for the Jewish people," because such a phrase implies the idea of present homelessness of the Jewish people. It is very significant that in the statement attributed to Balfour there are two provisions, one referring to the protection of the rights of non-Jewish peoples in Palestine, and another emphasizing the importance of maintaining the civil and political rights of Jews in lands where they enjoy them. It is quite evident that the phrase, "home land for the Jewish people," evoked misgiving on the part of many Jews, and that, therefore, the last assurance in the quoted statement of Balfour is intended to meet this misgiving.

Jews as a Nation.

This misgiving is, of course, justified. The Jews in Western lands cannot for a moment grant the idea that they are without a home. The reason that the majority of Jews dwelling in Western lands and influenced by the thought resulting from the emancipation of the Jews in Europe and their complete citizenship in America have refused to entertain Zionism as an ideal is that they feel and believe that their position in the Western world depends upon their maintenance of the principle that they belong to the nation in whose midst they dwell, that they are whole-souled citizens of the State which expresses the sovereignty of that nation. They have always rejected as an aspersion, animated by anti-Semitic motives, the thought that they were aliens, that they did not belong wholly to the land or the nation of which they claimed to be part. The Jews in Western lands have said that Judaism is a religion for them, and that the whole meaning of the genius and individuality of the historic people of Israel is to be found in the distinctive Jewish religion, the ethical ideals and the hopes for the world and for the whole human race which this religion connotes. They have refused to acknowledge that Israel is a nation, in the accepted sense of the word, and, therefore, they do not aspire to the creation of a State which shall express such a secular nationhood. State sovereignty being at the present recognized as the supreme expression of a nation's life. The Western Jews do well in maintaining their position. They would make a great mistake in departing from it.

No matter how secure the rights of the Jews in Western lands now appear, (and if, as we hope and trust, the results of the Russian revolution will prove permanent, they will form the climax of the great emancipation movement which has brought free and equal citizenship and opportunities to the Jews,) the Jews in Western lands cannot conceal from themselves the sinister possibilities that may result from the emphasis of Jewish nationality. Anti-Semites all over the world may seek maliciously to emphasize for them their hyphenated nationality, whereas today the Jews in Western lands, in this country and in Europe, feel themselves to be whole-souledly nationals of the countries to which they belong by birth or by naturalization.

The Zionist Program.

The non-Zionists feel that Zionism, in accordance with its present definition as a movement to obtain a legally and publicly secured home for the Jewish people in Palestine, quite unnecessarily injects a philosophy of Jewish life, an interpretation of the meaning of Israel's existence in the world, into what should be a purely practical enterprise. If the Zionists consented to modify their definition they could very easily bring about union of Jewry and a greater co-operation on behalf of the work for Jews in Palestine than exist today. And I hope and trust that such modification will eventually take place.

If Palestine is to be given, it should be given to Jews, and not to the Jewish people. This may appear as a fine-spun distinction. But, as a matter of fact, it emphasizes a vital difference of principle. It is recognized that, at best, only from 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 Jews could ever make this settlement of Palestine. The overwhelming majority of Jews would still remain outside of Palestine. Therefore, in thinking on the Jewish question, in formulating the Jewish ideals, one must envisage the whole of Israel, as it is scattered all over the world.

Jews in Palestine.

Jews who settle in Palestine, given local autonomy and enabled to unfold their life according to their traditions, religious ideas, laws, customs, and institutions, will work out their own salvation, and may prove a source of strength and fruitful influence for Judaism all over the world. Jewish history for the last 2,000 years proves how certain centres, because of the density of Jewish population and of the comparative freedom which they enjoyed as communities, influenced the whole world through the wealth of the life of the spirit, through the fruitful institutions they created, and through the great personalities which came to be recognized as authorities. Such an influential community can very well develop in Palestine under the new conditions, which such statements as those of Balfour promise. But it is for the Jews who live in Palestine to decide eventually their own destiny. Israel, as a whole, cannot be committed either to the doctrine that a new State in Palestine is the home land for the whole Jewish people, or even to the necessity of an independent Jewish State for the maintenance of Israel.

My conception of Israel is that of a great spiritual communion. To use a word familiar to the non-Jewish mind, and simply for the purpose of emphasizing its political and international aspects, I say that Israel is a great international "Church," as is, for example, the Christian Church, or more specifically the Catholic or the Protestant Church. These Churches have representatives in the nations and in the States of all lands. Their members are parts of these nations and these States.

And so I claim that Israel is such a Church, with a constitution peculiarly its own. The body of that Church is the historic people Israel. But to it men and women of any racial origin are welcome, because conversion of the Gentile has been the practice and the law of Jewry for over 2,000 years. I therefore hold, and I believe I fairly represent the non-Zionist attitude, that Israel does not emphasize its secular nationality, but rather its consecration to the God of Israel. It is a religious body and nothing else. In fact, Israel is the servant of God and of the religious ideas and of the moral and humanitarian ideals for which it lives in history. I use the word "servant" advisedly, because even when Israel was a people on its own soil, thousands of years ago, it did not develop that self-sufficient national consciousness which is the characteristic of modern nations and their interpretation of nationality. Israel is not self-sufficient. It does not exist for itself as an ordinary people. It is a servant of God. And its ethnic consciousness is a minor thing as compared with the God whom it serves.

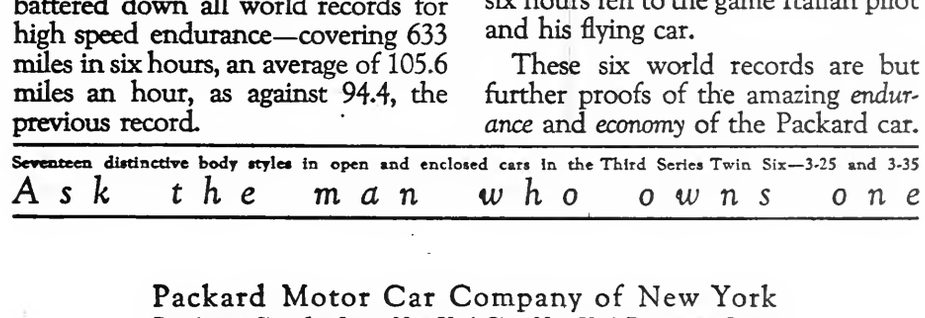
Jews Should Remain Scattered.

I therefore hold that the destiny of the Jew is to remain scattered all over the world. Not believing in a miraculous appearance of a Messiah, I consider the dispersion as final, and I interpret the great visions of our prophets in a purely universalistic spirit. The truth is that, if Israel's mission were fulfilled, if Israel's God-idea were realized, if men really believed in one God, there would be a united humanity today. As a matter of fact, religion is still too national, and there are almost as many gods today as there are nations and tribes. Israel's destiny is to be the great international spiritual force in the world, leading men to the pure monotheism which our propehts taught, and, at the same time, co-operating with the nations in whose midst it dwells and of which it is a part.

Anything that helps any sectior of Jewry naturally fills a Jewish heart with joy. The favorable consideration by the nations of the world of the possibilities of Palestine for some Jews should be received with gratitude. Every Jew believes in the right of Jews to migrate to any part of the world, because the earth belongs to God and not to any particular tribe. And if some Jews wish to build up a life in Palestine, because they feel that they will there find the best material and political conditions which will promote such life, it is good to see that mighty peoples are ready to favor and encourage their enterprise. But it must not be overlooked that only a definite number of Jews will live that life in Palestine. What they will do there is a matter that will concern themselves.

The Jewish community in Palestine, however, cannot be taken as the centre of the whole Jewish community in the world. The centre of Israel is something purely spiritual. It is its Bible, its inherited literature, which expresses the genius by which it lives. That centre it carries with it all over the world. Nor can Palestine, in any sense, be declared today as a home land for the Jewish people. The people has grown to a number too large for Palestine, and the people has grown in the spirit which has long ago transcended the confines of Palestine, or even the conception of any particular political organization. The Jewish spirit, with its monotheistic idea and with its great ideals for a united humanity, is a universal spirit, carried by the historic witness, Israel, whom God has chosen for the particular work of being His servant in the world.

To sum up, we rejoice in the good-will that is evidenced by the statement of the noble statesman, Balfour. But the phrasing is such an exact reproduction of the platform of Zionism, that we cannot entirely indorse it.



The new Packard Touring Car, seven passengers

Six smashing records

In the most splendid motor test that the world has ever seen—the Twin Six principle again demonstrates its marvelous economy.

And a Packard twelve-cylinder engine has evidenced its ability to get record power from every atom of its fuel.

At Sheepshead Bay, in an official six-hour trial, Ralph DePalma has battered down all world records for high speed endurance—covering 633 miles in six hours, an average of 105.6 miles an hour, as against 94.4, the previous record.

With a Packard engine of only 300 cubic inches cylinder capacity he traveled, in a single hour, 112.96 miles—bettering a record no one has been able to lower in seven years—a record made by an English machine of twice this cylinder capacity.

Then, in succession, the world's records for two, three, four, five and six hours fell to the game Italian pilot and his flying car.

These six world records are but further proofs of the amazing endurance and economy of the Packard car.

MOTOR CAR CHANGES FOR POORER FUELS

Engineer Says That Increasing Gasoline Demand Makes New Carburetion Systems Imperative.

Radical changes in gasoline engine construction must be made in the near future if the war and commercial needs of the country, depending upon gasoline for fuel, are to be maintained at their highest efficiency, W. P. Deppé, a mechanical engineer, told the members of the Metropolitan Section of the Society of Automotive Engineers at their monthly meeting last week at the Automobile Club of America.

The problem of obtaining a reasonable amount of efficiency with the grade of gasoline now in use has already become sufficiently important to arouse the attention of the leading automobile engineers, and various methods of adapting the carburetion system to give maximum results with the low-grade fuels are being heralded with more or less success.

Mr. Deppé made no attempt to disguise the fact that the motorist will probably never again see the day of the high-grade gasoline which was so readily obtainable before the outbreak of the war. At that time this fuel for the internal combustion engine represented barely 5 per cent. of the entire crude oil production. The tremendous increase of automobile use in America supplemented in recent years with its demand for war uses has forced the oil refiners to use about 18 per cent. of the total production for commercial fuel. Naturally such a large percentage means poorer quality. This is the grade of gasoline that the automobile owner is now using.

This is a condition that must be recognized and met, said Mr. Deppé, by the automobile manufacturing industry. He did not stop there, but went so far as to affirm that by improved methods of carburetion design it would be possible to use as commercial fuel from 40 to 50 per cent. of the crude oil production.

Mr. Deppé based his main argument upon the necessity of obtaining an additional supply of gasoline fuel, not so much by conserving its use under existing methods, but by finding means to use a much larger proportion than is now available without any decrease in efficiency. Indeed, he showed that it would be possible to obtain greater efficiency with the lower-grade fuels.

"All cars now average about twelve miles per gallon of gasoline," said Mr. Deppé. "They can average from eighteen to twenty miles by better carburetion, using the low-grade fuels, representing about one-half gasoline and one-half kerosene. Trucks now average from four to five miles per gallon. They can be made to average from six to eight miles."

The crude oil production of the United States is now about 310,000,000 barrels. The present world's production is something less than 500,000,000 barrels. The demands upon America by our Allies, it was stated, indicate that for 1918 about 50,000,000 barrels are needed in excess of the annual production, and this will be obtained by breaking in on the storage supply. Of the 310,000,000 barrels production only about 50,000,000 to 55,000,000 barrels, representing 18 per cent., can be used as gasoline for motor engines.

"Over 5,000,000 motor cars, trucks, &c., of which over 4,250,000 are in use in this country, are the foundation on which is now built the transportation systems of the world," said Mr. Deppé. "Gasoline engines furnish the prime motive power for two-thirds of all the mechanical power now serving the civilized world. In addition, there will be supplied from this country about 30,000 airplanes, each of 200 horsepower or over, and using twenty gallons of high-grade gasoline per hour if they deliver anything like their horsepower. At an average of five hours service per day, here is an additional demand next year of 70,000 barrels of good gasoline per day, to say nothing of over 50,000 military trucks and thousands of commercial vehicles.

"We can no more cut down the use of gasoline engine vehicles than we could cut down the use of steam and electric car lines. A way must be found to make more commercial gasolines out of crude oils and also secure more useful work out of every gallon of oil now furnished, or we are going to get some unpleasant jolts in the near future."

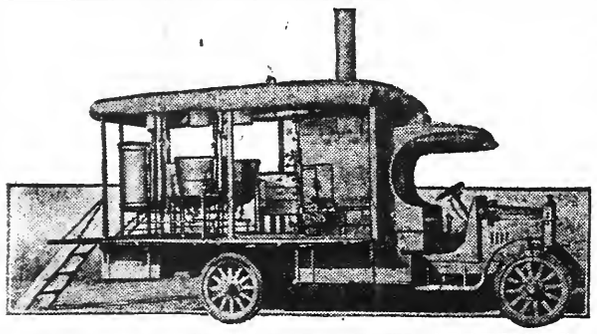
Divested of excessive technicalities, Mr. Deppé's explanation of the necessary engine design for the lower-grade fuels was substantially as follows:

The gas engine world using oils refined in high temperatures in the oil refinery is still trying to carburet such oils in low temperature carburetor methods, which means that wet mixtures of oil and air go into the cylinders, using the cylinders as inefficient vaporizers, and the flame spreads after ignition as the gasification means. This is too wasteful, and limits the ability to secure fuel economy in the engines and limits the oil refiner to the use of less than 20 per cent. of his crudes for motor fuels, instead of 40 to 50 per cent. of all his fuels.

The next great improvement in gas engines is to operate them as superheated gas engines, a method whereby the engines receive super-heated homogeneous fixed dry gases, before the ignition by spark. This sort of a fluid gas instantaneously flames completely at the moment of highest compression and before the piston has had time to get much past the top dead centre of compression stroke. Super-heated homogeneous dry gas methods of operating engines means that the world tomorrow with super-heated gas engines can use a mixture of present gasoline with present kerosene, half and half, which doubles motor fuels over night, in fact. Added to this is 50 per cent. or more of useful work per gallon of that hybrid mixture.

Further, it will enable oil refiners to triple the total volume of motor gasolines by the cracking methods which the Bureau of Mines has so carefully tested, to show the way for better utilization of crude oils in the refinery.

"We may shut our ears and say impossible, or that it cannot be done," added Mr. Deppé. "But what must be ultimately is simply to do these simple things. Because they involve large sums does not offer any valid reason why they cannot be done. Like Marshal Joffre's remark, gasoline saved Verdun—so it will be finally if we win this world's war. Car makers and gas engine men must recognize the necessity of changing their carburetion ideas. It will also mean that within four or five years all existing motor cars will be scrapped by wear and tear, and inability to use the low-grade fuels, and, like old clothes which have served us well, will be thrown away, but the metals will be available for new machines."



MOTOR KITCHEN FOR ARMY APPETITES.

Designed by a practical hotel man, this kitchen will serve a company of 250 men with hot meals in fifteen minutes. Mounted on a Sandow truck chassis, it was exhibited in this city by the L. & D. Motors, Inc., and was driven to Washington, where it is being tested by the War Department for prospective use in the various camps. It has a ten horse power steam boiler, two ninety-gallon kettles for soup or stews, and two fifty-gallon coffee urns.

JAPANESE USING MORE CARS

A garage in Osaka large enough to store several hundred cars is an indication that the demand for automobiles is on the increase in Japan.

"The houses are built so closely together that there is no room for private garages," says Y. Sugita, a graduate of the University of Chicago, who has just returned to this country from Japan, where he is the representative of a large American motor factory. "Whenever we sell a car we have to make arrangements to house it, so we keep it in our own garage, subject to the buyer's call, and furnish him with a driver whenever he wants to use his car. We also keep a corps of expert chauffeurs, who are hired by the hour by the motor car owners. This is necessary because the law makes it impossible for a Japanese to drive a car unless he has a chauffeur's license; and a man must be a skilled driver before the Government issues a permit.

"Were we to use American sales methods in Japan it would be hard to make a single sale. You Americans are accustomed to receiving literature on various products, follow-up letters and other sorts of mail advertising, and persistent personal calls. Were you to use these methods on a Japanese he would at once grow suspicious of your goods and would refuse to do business with you.

"Japan today is enjoying undreamed-of prosperity," added Mr. Sugita. "For the first time in our history exports are greater than our imports. All our arsenals are working day and night making munitions.

"For years Germany has done the bulk of the cotton goods business in China and India. Since the war Germany has been eliminated, and this market is ours practically without competition."

REPORT ON AUTO ACCIDENTS

Massachusetts Commissioner Finds Pedestrians Are Largely to Blame.

Some instructive facts regarding automobile accidents, which indicate that the carelessness of pedestrians is frequently the cause of the trouble for which motorists are more or less blamed, are given in the report for 1916 just issued by the Massachusetts State Highway Commission.

"The public has many erroneous ideas as to what causes automobile accidents," it says. "The impression gets abroad that most of the accidents are caused by reckless or drunken operators running at excessive speeds, and that many operators are never caught. These impressions are not correct in fact in any large proportion of the accidents. Out of the 675 cases examined the operators were believed to be intoxicated in 42 instances only, or in just about 6 per cent.

"Women are unusually careful operators, being involved in only 4 per cent. of all the accidents, although they constitute about 8 per cent. of the licensed operators. They were held 'not at fault' in seven out of eight fatal accidents.

"In the 265 cases in which 243 pedestrians and 22 others were killed, the pedestrian or other user of the highway was wholly at fault in 162 and partly to blame in 43. The operator was wholly at fault in 51 cases and partly to blame in 43. In more than half of all the cases in which pedestrians and other users of the highway outside of the motor vehicle were either killed or injured the accident would not have occurred if the ordinary precaution had been taken of looking before crossing.

"In 433, or in nearly two-thirds, of these cases, the motor vehicle was going at less than eighteen miles an hour, and in 218 was going at less than twelve miles. In 1915 there was one fatal accident for every 381 registered motor vehicles, while in 1916 there was one fatal accident for every 468 motor vehicles registered.

"The number of automobiles and trucks (in Boston) increased over 33 per cent. during the year, while the number of deaths caused by them only increased 7 per cent. and the injuries only 15 per cent. Taking the State as a whole, the increase in the number of fatal accidents caused by motor vehicles (including motor cycles) has not been nearly as great as the increase in the number of motor vehicles registered. The fatal accidents increased only 7 per cent., while the motor vehicles registered increased over 37 per cent."

In its 1916 report the Police Department refrained from tabulating the records showing the number of accidents and deaths due to the fault of the injured, but in its report for 1915 the figures showed that 90 per cent. of the accidents were attributable to the injured.

Electrics in England After War.

A demand for American electric vehicles in England after the war is predicted by Consul E. H. Dennison of Birmingham. "In the past," he says, "this type of car failed to obtain much popularity, but the scarcity and high price of gasoline and the difficulty of obtaining any of the ordinary liquid fuels have caused a change. When the war is over it is thought that there will be a large demand for the electric car. Several municipalities have been experimenting with heavy electric vehicles and obtained satisfactory results.

"A heavy car which runs between the towns of Smethwick, Dudley, and Kidderminster is supplied with electrical energy at a low cost. Birmingham is well situated from an electric-vehicle point of view. Not only is current cheap, but within a fifty-mile radius of the city there are twenty-two charging stations, apart from the seven stations within the city."

ADVICE FOR AUTOIST IN COLD WEATHER

Keeping Engine Warm the Great Necessity—Remedies to Prevent Freezing and Loss of Power.

By WILLIAM H. STEWART, JR.

The great danger in Summer is overheating, and the great danger in Winter is over-cooling. A few hints at the present time, just as Winter is approaching, should be noted.

Few motorists realize why an automobile engine does not pull well when cold. It must be understood that it is a heat engine and that it is the expansion of the burning gas in the cylinder which furnishes the power. The more this gas expands the more push or power the piston receives. The heat necessary for this expansion is produced by the burning of the mixture of gasoline and air after it is compressed in the cylinder. The temperature of the resulting flame is between 2,000 and 3,000 degrees Fahrenheit. Naturally this causes an enormous pressure on the piston, but if any of the heat is lost, and so is not used in expanding the gas, the resulting pressure drops with attending loss of power. When the engine is first started the cylinder head and walls are cold, likewise the valves and piston head, and the water in the cooling system. Most of the heat units must be lost in warming these parts, and so the engine lacks power.

This explains why the engine does not develop its full power until it has been run several minutes, the greatest efficiency being obtained when the engine is hot. Even with the most efficient systems the power loss approximates 50 per cent., which, unfortunately, is unavoidable with the internal combustion type motor.

To prevent excessive loss at the start some systems use thermostats to control the water flow, preventing it from passing into the radiator until it has warmed the engine to the proper temperature. Others use a set of adjustable louvers in front of the radiator to allow sometimes more and sometimes less air to pass through the radiator. This may be an automatic control by thermostat or may be controlled by the driver from the seat. All these systems are designed to heat the engine rapidly at the start and so save time and gasoline.

It is evident that overcooling prevents the engine from developing its full power, thus wasting gasoline. In hill climbing the loss of power becomes more serious. If the car cannot make it in high gear the intermediate is used, running the engine at a more rapid rate than in high gear, and so wasting still more gasoline. Apart from this it delays the progress of the car, which is sometimes important.

Here is where a car with adjustable louvers has an advantage over one not similarly equipped. In cold weather the louvers may be very nearly closed, thus taking away a minimum amount of heat, watching carefully, of course, to see that no steam comes from radiator cap or overflow tube. If the radiator is not provided with adjustable louvers, use a piece of sheet metal, cardboard, or fibreboard, cutting off half, or more, of the radiating surface. Some drivers attach the strip in front of the radiator, but this detracts from the appearance of the car. Place it back of the radiator, but do not wire it to the tubes, as it will start them leaking sooner or later. Usually there are holes in the strip on which the hood rests which may be used, or holes may be made there without harm. The metal strip is apt to be noisy, cardboard is too readily broken, so that fibreboard would seem to be the best material. It may be obtained at large hardware stores.

To prevent freezing is also important. There are many auto-freeze preparations on the market, but they are apt to contain chlorine, which attacks the solder in the radiator, causing serious leaks to develop. Glycerine is sometimes used, but it rots the rubber hose at top and bottom of the radiator. Alcohol is the only substance which does not harm any part of the system, but it has its disadvantages. It lowers the boiling point of the water, and evaporates readily, so that more has to be added from time to time. Use about one-fourth alcohol for a climate like that of New York and about one-third for places further north. Add another pint occasionally.

Keep the car in a warm garage over night, not merely to prevent freezing but to make starting easier. Also blanket the radiator carefully, covering every part, as that is the most likely to freeze.

GOOD SOUTHERN TOUR.

Comfortable 'Motoring to Pleasant Resorts as Far as Asheville.

This is the time of the year when the motorist turns his attention to the possibilities of Southern touring. The road tourist of the Automobile Club of America has just made a personal inspection of the routes to some of the popular resorts, extending as far as Asheville, N. C.

From New York to Perth Amboy, by way of Newark, the macadam is in good condition, but rather rough and worn through South Amboy. The surface is good brick and macadam to Keyport, excepting a short stretch of about 100 feet, which is as yet unfinished. Between Keyport and Matawan the road is rather rough, but from there to Lakewood good gravel is found with a few rutted sections through Freehold and Farmingdale.

The Lancaster Pike is in very good condition from Philadelphia to Chambersburg, with the exception of a few short stretches.

The road between Gettysburg, Penn., and Frederick, Md., via Emmitsburg, Md., should be avoided, as there is a poor detour at Emmitsburg.

The Shenandoah Valley is open and in good condition from Winchester to Staunton. From Staunton to Hot Springs, after the first eleven miles, the road is of dirt and red clay.

Leaving Staunton, an excellent macadam road runs east through Basic City and Rock Fish Gap to within five miles of Charlottesville, providing interesting scenery. From Charlottesville to about ten miles west of Richmond there is a graded clay road which is slippery in wet weather. The road between Charlottesville and Lynchburg is rough and in some places almost impassable.

From Greensboro, through Kernersville to Winston-Salem, the road is hard surfaced. The new macadam road between Greensboro and High Point, N. C., is a credit to that section, being one of the best pieces of highway construction in the Southern States.

From High Point there is a fair sand clay road through Lexington and Yadkin to Spencer, succeeded by fairly good macadam to Salisbury, and a new concrete and macadam seven miles beyond Salisbury, followed by a short, rough stretch of stone road into China Grove. The next six miles is fair sand clay to Kannapolis, then good macadam to Concord, and the remainder of the road to Charlotte is hard surface. From that point south to Belmont the road is twenty feet wide.

From Belmont through McAdenville, Lowell, and Gastonia to Bessemer City a fair sand clay road leads to Kings Mount. The next fifteen miles to Blacksburg is a graded clay, with some rough stretches, and the same condition is found through Gaffney, Cowpens, and Converse to Spartanburg, S. C.

The best way to reach Asheville, N. C., is to follow the trunk line through to Greenville, then take the Saluda-Hendersonville road to Asheville, as the Hickorynut Gap route from Salisbury has some bad stretches and in wet weather would be impassable.

LESS FOOD, MORE WEIGHT.

Twelve Factory Workers Are Put Through Conservation Test.

An interesting experiment in food conservation has been worked out by one of the large rubber companies toward solving the problem of lower cost of living with no impairment of physical vitality. A diet squad was formed of twelve employes, six men and six women, each representing a different weight class.

For the first week the squad was allowed no choice in the selection of food. The company's dietitian had worked out a series of menus, based on the calorific value of the foods used. No eating between meals was allowed and candies and sweetmeats were barred. At the end of the first week each person was weighed and the physical condition noted. For the second week the members selected their own food. The weights and physical condition were again taken and compared with those of the first week.

The test proved a complete vindication for the application of conservation methods, from the standpoints of both health and economy. A compilation of results showed that during the first week, with the food prescribed by the dietitian, the squad gained in weight and maintained normal health at a cost of $3.25 per person. At the end of the second week, with each person selecting his own food, the squad lost in weight, and at a cost of $4.28 per person.

TRANSPORT COMMITTEE.

Will Aid Government in Planning Long-Haul Trucking.

R. D. Chapin, Chairman of the Good Roads Committee of the A. A. A. and Vice President of the Lincoln Highway Association, has been appointed Chairman of the Highway Transport Committee. The committee has been appointed by Daniel Willard, chairman of the Transportation Committee of the Council of National Defense, to consider the problems involved in long-haul motor truck transportation.

The other members of the committee are L. W. Page, director of the Office of Public Roads of the Department of the Interior; H. G. Shirley, chief engineer of the State Road Commission of Maryland, and G. H. Pride of New York City.

Increased Speed in Transportation of Nation's Products—Today's Problem

New Speed Factor Enters Field of Transportation

You can sell your product—but can you deliver it?

Give us delivery—that is the cry.

Speed—speed—speed—wanted, demanded and insisted upon as never before.

And here is the solution of the problem of increased speed in truck deliveries.

Today it is an acknowledged fact that motor trucks equipped with our Cord Pneumatic Truck Tires can be operated at a greatly increased speed with absolute safety and economy.

Increased speed means increased deliveries for long and short hauls—and also lower delivery cost.

In every way the new revolutionary United States 'Nobby' Cord Pneumatic Truck Tire goes to the heart of the nation's vital transportation problem—makes it easier, cheaper, quicker for you to fulfil your transportation obligations.

* * * * * * *

Some trucks can't use pneumatic tires, but eighty per cent. can—can yours?

If yours can, you can save money on gasoline, oil and truck upkeep, and at the same time increase your truck efficiency.

About sixty per cent. of commercial cars today use pneumatic tires—of woven fabric construction—and United States Woven Fabric Pneumatic Tires have made a phenomenal record—just as United States Solid Truck Tires have made such phenomenal records on the other forty per cent. of commercial cars.

But the next logical step in truck tire evolution is our 'Nobby' Cord Pneumatic Tire, the answer in economy, speed and resiliency.

While the United States 'Nobby' Cord Pneumatic Truck Tire is new on the market, it has been tested for many years, and has been tried and proved under conditions far severer than those in practical use—with startlingly satisfying results.

Recently an Army transport expert put a set of these tires (36 x 7) on a ton and a half motor truck, with an overload of a ton and a quarter, making two and three-quarters tons in all.

He drove this truck under army conditions 4,288 miles over the most difficult part of the American continent—where there were roads, and where there were no roads.

With this result—he averaged seven miles per gallon of gasoline; thirty-three miles per quart of oil; —and at the end of the trip the truck was still in practically as good condition as when it started.

See the nearest United States Truck Tire Dealer or the nearest United States Tire Service Branch. The truck tire expert will tell you. If there is no dealer near you write us, sending make of your truck and the capacity—1790 Broadway, New York.

BARNARD STATUE STILL UNDER FIRE

THE REV. DR. JOHN WESLEY HILL, Chancellor of Lincoln Memorial University, was recently a speaker for the Liberty bond issue in Illinois. He came in contact with many Springfield citizens who had known Abraham Lincoln well. From them he heard unanimous disapproval of the Barnard statue. John W. Bunn, President of the Springfield Marine Bank, is quoted by Dr. Hill as follows:

"I came to Springfield in 1847, when I was 16 years old. I knew Mr. Lincoln from that time until he was elected President and went to Washington. I saw him continually in those years, and knew him intimately and well. I last saw him on Christmas before his death. I consider the Barnard statue an outrage. No one who knew Mr. Lincoln could possibly feel satisfied with it. It does him absolute injustice. It is incredible that it could be sent abroad as the American idea of Mr. Lincoln."

At a dinner given by the Trustees of Memorial University last week, ex-Senator Towne offered resolutions which were passed, including the following:

Nothing can so inspire the minds and souls of men with a passion for regulated political liberty as the study of the history, personality, and achievements of the Great Emancipator. Such study would be vastly stimulated by erecting at appropriate places, in countries sincerely attempting the realization of democratic ideals, statues of Lincoln which, heroically proportioned and essentially faithful in personal portraiture, shall yet, in bronze or marble, obedient to the interpretative insight of inspired artistry, exhibit the real Lincoln, not a caricature, and make manifest to men of distant lands and future ages something of the spiritual beauty, of the intellectual power, of the natural dignity, of the depth and clarity of vision, of the gently compulsive but irresistible force of character, of the measureless magnanimity, of the infinite sympathy, of the high serenity, of the simple and unswerving faith, of the absolute justice, of the sense of consecration and dedication to inevitable duty, which they saw and felt who knew and loved him, and which his life and death exemplified.

It is the sense of this meeting, comprising Americans of various callings and divergent political opinions, that the Chancellor and Board of Directors of Lincoln Memorial University may well find it germane to the splendid educational program they are basing upon the character and example of Abraham Lincoln, to undertake the organization, co-ordination and direction of efforts, whether individual, co-operative or public, to cause statues of the kind hereinbefore described to be erected in the capitals of all the nations associated in the sublime crusade to make the world safe for democracy.

Francis Grierson proposed that Chancellor Hill be appointed a national censor and general custodian of the plans, lines, proper figures, postures, &c., showing how Lincoln should be presented to the people of Europe or any other country.

The Awkward Squad.

"Company! Attention, company; lift up your left leg and hold it straight out in front of you!"

One of the squad held up his right leg by mistake. This brought his right-hand companion's left leg and his own right leg close together. The officer, seeing this, exclaimed angrily:

"And who is that blooming galoot over there holding up both legs?"—Chicago News.

SWISS TRAP A GERMAN SPY.

Sommers Collected Agents Whom He Sent to France for Information.

GENEVA, Oct. 31. (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Switzerland's most notorious spy has been sentenced to five months' imprisonment and a fine for his activity on behalf of Germany. He is Baron Heinrich von Sommers, alias Dr. Henry F. Somerset. His expulsion from Switzerland for two years has been ordered.

His case not only is interesting because of the audacity of his work but because for almost three years he posed as an American, managed to induce two United States Embassies to give him American passports, and almost got another from a third embassy. He has been a German since a clever clerk discovered the fraud he was perpetrating, and, in the former American Embassy in Berlin, took away from him the passport he had wheedled out of the American Embassy in Rome.

Since shortly after that time Somerset, or von Sommers, or Van Siemers, as he sometimes was called, has been in Switzerland, whither he came armed with German papers, and after unsuccessfully offering his services as a spy to both the French and the English, has, as his trial revealed, been working for the German Government.

Sommers's business had been to collect and train Swiss agents to send to France, where they were to gather as much military and political information as possible, while Sommers remained in Geneva and kept track of returning repatriates and obtained all the information possible. Information obtained in either way would be carried to Zurich by one of the trio and sent over into Germany by underground means.

Sommers, however, made another mistake. He picked the wrong man in his search for agents. That man, a news dealer, pretended to agree to his plan, even accepted money from him, and then told the police. Thus the Swiss got him and have made him harmless for a while.

SCIENTIFIC FISHERMAN.

He Discovers a Way to Catch Essex County's Big Bass.

A little body of water in Essex County, in the Adirondack Mountains, has long been known by the guides to contain exceptionally large black bass of the small-mouthed variety, but until quite recently no fish of large size had been taken.

A few weeks ago a stranger to the guides in the vicinity visited Lake Bixby, as the pond is called, and brought into camp a string of bass which literally astonished the natives. Before returning to civilization the stranger partly revealed his secret. He explained that on a previous visit he had caught a two-pound bass with a conventional lure, and had carefully subjected it to an autopsy, in order to identify its favorite food. He became satisfied that the fish preferred a certain kind of beetle, and this year's experience convinced him that his conclusion was correct.

Unless the curious fisherman is mistaken, the capture of bass in the deep and cool Adirondack lakes will be less difficult than formerly, as it is claimed that the beetle is obtainable without great trouble.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

Discharged—But Not Fired

Don't think your battery's a "dead one" because it's discharged. With expert handling a discharged battery can be filled again with "pep" and put back on the job.

But it takes an expert to do it—to determine the proper slow rate of charge to begin with, then to speed up the charge as the battery is able to take it.

Recharging is only one phase of the battery service we're offering car owners, but it's an important one.

And don't forget that a Still Better Willard and Threaded Rubber Insulation means less liability to battery trouble of any kind.

BYNG OF CAMBRAI

Seventh Son of an Earl, Commander of Canadians at Vimy, Now Leads Biggest British Smash of War.

GENERAL, the Honorable Sir Julian Hedworth George Byng, K. C. B., K. C. M. G., who has won the honor of being mentioned in the official dispatches as the General in charge of the great drive of the British toward Cambrai, is a member of the "new school" in the British Army. Whether or not it is true that General Byng is the original of "Colonel Rendezvous," the apostle of efficiency and national service in "Mr. Britling Sees It Through," an "apostle of efficiency" General Byng has always been. His army record has been one of steady successes, unmarked until now by any sensational acquisition of fame. He has been none the less popular among his men for the strictness of his insistence on discipline. He has moved ahead very quietly, training men and leading them. "The very best type of soldier," a young British officer here said of him, adding: "And outside the army no one has ever heard of him."

"Bingo Byng," they call him in the army. The Canadians whom he led at Vimy Ridge frankly adore him. They are throwing their hats into the air because of Bingo Byng's drive at Cambrai. Yet it is General Byng who insists that his men polish the backs of their buttons and the nails on their boots. No leader has been more insistent than he on discipline which, to the uninitiated, must seem like discipline for discipline's sake. He is one of the men who, in training the new armies, has made successful the system of "parade in the morning, parade in the afternoon, parade in the evening." For more than a year he commanded the splendid Canadians, with whom he has always been so popular, and an unconscious commentary on his system of training may be found in Major Eric Fisher Woods "Notebook of an Intelligence Officer" on the matter of discipline:

"The Canadian troops when they first went to Europe were ineffective and vulnerable because they did not sufficiently appreciate the value of rigid and punctilious discipline. They did not lack courage or initiative, but these qualities, to have military value, must be co-ordinated by strict discipline. Today, having learned their lesson from experience, that most terrible of all teachers, the Canadians welcome the sternest discipline; and since they combine with this the will to use the bayonet they are now among the most effective troops in Europe."

The Hon. Sir Julian Hedworth George Byng is the seventh son of the Earl of Strafford. As a young man he entered the army with a commission in the 10th Hussars, and with that regiment he served in the Sudan campaign in 1884 and won distinction in the South African war, where he was promoted to be Colonel of his regiment. In 1902-4 he commanded the regiment. After that he became head of the Cavalry School at Netheravon, Salisbury Plain. He was made a Major General in 1909, and since 1914 he has been a divisional commander.

It was at Netheravon that he began to be most definitely recognized as one of the "new men," the type of the "new tradition" that the South African war brought to the British Army. Before that time, as an English student of his country's affairs pointed out when talking of General Byng, the tradition of the British Army centred in India, and Rudyard Kipling was its poet laureate. Since the beginning of the present century the tradition of the British Army has found its centre and its expression in Aldershot, the place where men are trained. Sir Douglas Haig and the other "new men" are men of that tradition. It is a tradition of rigid—and to the outsider inexplicable—discipline. Under this discipline, as distinguished from the kind of training that the laymen might possibly call more "practical," the men parade and parade and parade and "form fours." They learn to respond automatically to directions, to obey orders unfallingly even in the midst of unspeakable confusion and horror, to be perfect in their mastery of detail.

"A man isn't prepared for a battle when he is taught things that depend on his thinking," a British officer said. "In battle the soldier can't think. He must be able to do the right thing without thinking. That is the reason for the discipline that men like Byng stand for, as opposed to the other type of training. If you need any argument for the excellence of the kind of discipline and training obtained at Aldershot and Netheravon, which made the little British Army absolutely second to none in efficiency, you can find it in the mere fact that when the new armies were trained in the midst of this war they were trained in just that same way. That is how Byng trained his Canadians. And look at those Canadians! There's nothing to beat them.

"Byng was in charge at Vimy Ridge," the officer added, "and he certainly ran that show well!"

In this war General Byng has had a notable record of success. After being with the early British Expeditionary Force in the battle that began before Antwerp, he was placed in command of the Third Cavalry Division that made the stand before Ypres, protected the Belgian withdrawal, and thrust back the Germans for the first time in what was to have been their "march to the sea." In the official reports at that time General Sir John French stated that the troops under General Byng "were repeatedly called upon to restore situations at critical points and fill gaps in the line caused by the tremendous losses which occurred." In recognition of his work at that time, which had been highly praised by the Commander in Chief, General Byng was made a Knight Commander of St. Michael and St. George.

In 1915 he was sent to the Dardanelles in command of the Ninth Army Corps, succeeding General Stopford at Suvla Bay, and he took part in the later stages of the Gallipoli campaign. In May, 1916, he was placed in command of the Canadian Corps on the western front.

It was under General Byng that the Canadians performed their great part in the battle of the Somme, and effected the brilliant capture of Vimy Ridge last April. Last June, when General Sir Henry Edmund Allenby was sent to Egypt, General Byng succeeded him in command of the British Third Army.

"He has never been a gallery player at all," an officer said of him, "yet with his Third Army he has led one of the most sensational surprise attacks of the war."

General Byng is the second British commander thus to be mentioned in the official report from the Field Marshal's headquarters. The first General thus honored was Sir Herbert Charles Onslow Plumer, to whom, by name, Sir Douglas Haig gave first credit for the Mesaines Ridge advance in June.

It was explained that the reason General Plumer was especially mentioned in the report was that he had himself originated and perfected the plan and preparation of the attack. It is a not unnatural inference that the idea of the tank onslaught, and the marvelous secrecy that preceded the sudden action of last Tuesday, may be due to General Byng himself.

General Byng is 55 years old. His wife, who was Miss Marie Evelyn Moreton before her marriage in 1902, is well-known in England as a novelist. His grandfather, the first Earl of Trafford, was a noted English Field Marshal.

RADICAL SUFFRAGISM IN MRS. HUMISTON CHARGE

To the Editor of The New York Times:

UNFORTUNATELY, Mrs. Humiston once was right. This lends a certain authority to whatever outrageous statements she may be pleased to fling before a startled world. On the whole, considering this, the newspapers have not given too much credence to her wild talk, and they have rebuked her, not very sternly, with considerably more patience, on the whole, than she deserved; but, none the less, rebuke her they did. Now, there is just a possibility that there will be people who look upon this outbreak of Mrs. Humiston as the mistake or misfortune of an individual, but to me it is symptomatic of the attitude of the radical wing of the suffragists which is fast mounting into the saddle. It is but one more evidence of that same spreadhenism which I have so often in the past had occasion to point to and to describe, and for which I even went so far as to coin the phrase. It was to combat this tendency on the part of women to overpraise women, and undervalue men, that half a dozen years ago I wrote "The Dominant Sex," although, in all humility, I must admit that my literary effort made no perceptible inroads. If anyone doubts that spreadhenism is a serious handicap to clear thinking, let him or her attend several meetings of clubwomen, and bask in the sun of self-praise that shines from the platform.

Only a few weeks ago at a large women's meeting at the City Hall I heard a prominent suffrage leader speak about the necessity of "protecting our girls from the soldiers." I confess that such language made my blood boil, and I wanted to get up and rebuke the speaker, but I already had been on my feet several times protesting at one thing or another, and I did not wish to appear to be "running" the meeting, so the lady went unreproved, nor did I hear any indignant comments. I could not at the time help wondering that if this was the kind of thing women were thinking about their own army, what language would be left them if the enemy should ever reach this soil? I wanted so much to cry out, "It is an insult to the men of our army to say we must protect our girls from them; what we need is to protect our soldiers from the women." The truth is that every soldier is in danger from women who prey upon them professionally, and that not one decent, self-respecting girl has anything to fear from any man in the United States uniform. I only wish, oh, how I do wish, that some one could get it into the heads of the women that men on the whole are as strongly opposed to violation as women are. I am sure that if it could be proved that a soldier had forced a woman his life would not be safe among his comrades. Here and there are vicious men, just as here and there are women panderers, but the time has come when women, if they are going to take their new citizenship seriously, must face the truth that virtue is of no one sex; that the majority of men are not beasts, nor the majority of women angels.

For many years I have fought the placing of the ballot in the hands of the women, not so much because of the actual voting, as from a dread of the inroads of a dangerous sentimentality which refuses to face life as it is, which perslats in regarding women collectively as of a higher, finer fibre than men; which credits them with higher aspirations, control, and ideals. This smugness, this spreadhenism will play a devastating part in the life of America if it is to have its way unchallenged. If women are to hang together because they are women, if women are to refuse to listen to the truth from men, if women are to continue in their vicious course of "raising the age of consent," encouraging more legislation like the Mann law, legitimatizing children born out of wedlock, making the fathers support their illegitimate children, in short, making this country one delightful paradise for the feminine blackmailer, if the women are going to vote solidly for the men who will meekly do as they are told, if they are going to pester and nag every one who dares to differ with them, we shall certainly rue the day when we ever began seriously to heed their clamor.

Now if there is any one thing that will unite all the former anti-suffragists is the necessity to combat any sign of "sex antagonism," and if again we are asked what is this "sex antagonism" we have been talking about, the existence of which the suffragists have so indignantly denied, we need only point to Mrs. Humiston and we shall at last be understood. For after all this thing is very difficult to combat and it goes very deep. It is astounding how sure the suffragist is that women, once they can vote, will vote themselves free from prostitution, free from drunkenness, free from evils of all sorts. I cannot get my suffrage friends to realize that women will not turn about and rend Tammany, even those whose sons and husbands have Tammany jobs. It is enough for these good souls that they are "women," ergo they must have been waiting impatiently all these years to rise up in their might and strike wrongdoing wherever it lifts its head. They may have been poor wives, lazy, indifferent housekeepers, neglectful and stupid others, but are they not women and therefore certain to want only the finest and best of ideals to hold away? The woman can do no wrong!

Some day the sanity, the balance, and clear-cut vision of the former anti-suffragists will be appreciated. We have always said that sex should not be confused with class, that there were no interests which concerned women that men were not equally concerned in, that women are mothers to their sons, and men fathers to their daughters, and that it was shameful and dangerous to permit feminists to keep pounding away into the minds of women that they need to protect themselves against men as a whole. I am quite sure we will not permit ourselves to be taught good citizenship by women, we shall not put sex above country, we shall not take our mental food with a feministic twist. We shall get advice from such men as we have the greatest individual confidence in, we shall vote as those individuals vote, we shall do our share in preventing a wave of hysterical spreadhenism from sweeping over this country. Alas, it is no light task we have dedicated ourselves to! Already we see the danger of the current false attitude, the American attitude of blind sentimentality in the Government announcement that while male Germans are to be registered and carefully watched, these laws will not be enforced in the case of women.

Already it looks as if in this land of ours no woman can do wrong. God help us.

These HYATT BEARINGS Hold the World's Endurance Record

HERE THEY ARE—the original "Hyatt Roller" bearings, dripping with grease—just as they were taken from the "Hyatt Roller" at the end of its long grinding circuit of the country.

272,962 miles is now the official record of this car—a greater proved distance than any other car has ever gone.

When these bearings were photographed, it was the first time they had seen the light since the world's long-distance veteran started its journey "Around the U. S. A."

Yet this original set of Hyatt bearings is still serviceable. Laboratory examination shows an average wear of only four one-thousandths of an inch (.004")—a wear perceptible only to micrometer and microscope—not enough to interfere with the good service they have given and will continue to give when returned to their positions in the car.

In view of their past—nine years strenuous service covering 261,800 miles—their latest 11,163 mile performance is all the more remarkable.

They have surmounted all the toughest conditions of touring—gumbo roads, mountain grades, desert sands—and have finished on schedule time.

This test gives you a definite indication of the enduring, quiet, carefree service you can expect from your Hyatt Roller Bearings.

REA ANSWERS CRITIC OF BIG STATION HERE

Too Large for Present, He Admits but Says It Was Built for Future.

CALLS IT MOST EFFICIENT

Twice as Many Passengers Now Handled as at Time of Opening Seven Years Ago.

Answering the criticism of the Pennsylvania Station here as a "monument to inefficiency" and something that could not be fully used for years to come, Samuel Rea, President of the Pennsylvania Railroad, has written a reply in which he says that the station is a most efficient institution, and while it is not at present fully utilized, it was built with an eye to the future development of New York City.

"The Pennsylvania Station," he said, "instead of being a monument to inefficiency and waste and a white elephant, is a monument to foresight and the necessities of New York City, and the whole country with which it does business, and more especially so for the Pennsylvania Railroad System, whose passenger revenues are about 20 per cent. greater than the next largest railroad system of the country. Its revenue passenger mileage is about 13⅓ per cent. of the whole country, notwithstanding it constitutes only about 4½ per cent. of the country's mileage. Its ton mileage is also larger than any other and is nearly 13 per cent. of the entire ton mileage of the nation's railroad systems, and that ton mileage doubles every twelve years, necessitating the construction of separate passenger facilities and lines.

"The station was constructed for the future and primarily for the long-distance passenger travel to and from New York, New England, and the Southern and Western States, the local and suburban traffic to New Jersey being accommodated through the joint service so successfully inaugurated between Newark and New York via the Hudson Tunnels, which is handling about 200 per cent. more passengers than in its first year of operation. Pennsylvania Station was opened seven years ago, and in the first year's operation 9,862,424 passengers arrived and departed from it, whereas in the last year this grew to 18,135,311 passengers."

Answering the criticism that "Not for many years will its handling capacity be completely utilized," Mr. Rea said:

"What would the public say of a management with an actively expanding business which built for the present only? That station is built for the present and for the years to come, and is so adapted as to handle the increasing traffic of the Pennsylvania and its Long Island Railroads, and also such traffic as the New Haven will put into and through it; and when justified, more tunnels may be built, the station and yard facilities being adequate therefor. Does the public realize that Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, which is served by several double-track railroad lines running in every direction, has been opened for thirty-six years, and Pennsylvania Station only seven years, yet the latter handles about as many passengers and has larger revenue from passengers?

"Did the writer of the criticism stop to inquire why this terminal was built alone by the Pennsylvania Railroad System, or why that system had to determine at the time it did to extend into and through New York or forever terminate on the west bank of the Hudson? The building of this great work now would, by reason of its cost, be prohibitory. Until electric traction for steam roads was developed no responsible railroad would approve of tunnels under the Hudson for steam traction. Between 1890 and 1900, when the North River Bridge was projected, a Federal charter was procured, to have it open to all railroads, and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company actively worked for its realization.

"In 1900 its Board of Directors agreed to use the bridge when built and guaranteed its share of traffic at an agreed rate, provided the other railroads would join. None of the other railroads did join, and while the matter was pending electric traction on the Orleans railroad tunnel extension in Paris was inaugurated, whereupon the Pennsylvania turned its attention to tunnels, incorporated its Tunnel Railroad System, purchased a majority of stock of the Long Island Railroad, constructed the extension and erected the Pennsylvania Station, and since then has constructed the New York Connecting Railroad jointly with the New Haven. The whole project, outlined sixteen years ago, including its vast improvements, passenger and freight, and also those of the Long Island Railroad, has been carried out and devoted to public use. The Seventh Avenue Subway, long projected and which we had hoped would be completed when our station was opened, is now nearing completion and will be opened soon to accommodate our passengers.

"How would this great improvement have been secured otherwise? Would the City of New York have obligated itself for the cost and the interest thereon for a station for all the railroads on the possibility of them using it? Let me express the opinion here that a union station could not be built in that huge city that could conveniently accommodate all the rail traffic. If attempted, the cost, and the congestion around it and on the approach streets, would make its useful operation impracticable.

"As to co-operation, notwithstanding our railroads have in the past been reared on competition, and for most of the time unreasonable competition, and that they have fairly been compelled by State and Federal laws to compete, if such compulsion be possible, they are today, in times of stress, co-operating to a degree never dreamed of and second to no other industry, and serving their Government nobly. All we can say is that there has been more thorough co-operation among railroads than any other competitive industries, in the universal interchange of cars and freight and passenger travel, in trackage arrangements, and in joint stations and facilities, and in harmonious co-operation with shippers and patrons of the railroads.

"It takes time to make radical changes, and railroad practice and custom are no exception, but in time—and let us hope a reasonably short time—many more things which are complained of will be ironed out and to the advantage of the public. But suppose the railroads had undertaken, previous to the war, to do what is proposed as a war measure for the War Port Board, namely, pool the lighterage facilities and with it their local freight facilities and other things, how far would they have gotten under existing law, Federal and State? There is only one answer, such a combination would have been condemned and most of its officers would have been in jail for violation of the law. People are, however, gradually changing their views about railroads, and let us hope that this war will bring the public at large to a true appreciation of their worth and necessity, not only for the successful prosecution of the war but also for our general welfare, and that a reasonable constructive program, with rates that will produce a remunerative return and insure progress and adequate facilities in New York Harbor and elsewhere will be evolved by the active demand of the public and the press."

JAPAN TO TAKE OUR COTTON.

Gold Embargo to Shift Some Trade from India to America.

TOKIO, Oct. 30, (Associated Press.)—How to adjust Japan's business to the new situation created by America's ban on steel and gold and luxuries is the chief subject of discussion. When America cut off the gold export, Japan's cotton trade with India suffered, because she had previously been able to buy advantageously with gold which the Indians desired for private hoarding. This necessity of adjusting the trade balance in America led Viscount Mishima, Governor of the Bank of Japan, to call to him the leading cotton spinners and urge that they buy in America.

The amount paid to India by Japan annually for cotton is about 80,000,000 yen, which approximates the balance of trade between Japan and the United States. The amount of Indian cotton being imported reaches 1,500,000 bales per annum. It is now thought possible to decrease the Indian import to 750,000 bales, which will enable Japan to purchase a million bales from America. Such a policy, however, will be attended with an advance in the cost of the manufactured products, which will have an adverse effect on Japanese cotton goods in the Chinese market.

It is contended that American cotton is of too fine a quality and too expensive for use in manufacturing the coarser cloth which forms the bulk of Japan's cotton export to China. More recently, however, the tone of the press has become less extreme and seems to point to final acceptance of Viscount Mishima's suggestion. The fear of the cutting off of Japan's silk business had also a disquieting effect, and the ban on steel excited comment.

Invoices for Mail Shipments.

Attention has frequently been called by the Department of Commerce to the need of furnishing legalized consular invoices with parcel-post shipments to Chile when the value of the merchandise is over $24.33. But, according to one of the Special Agents of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, packages from prominent American firms continue to arrive without the required invoices. The fee for certification of invoices covering goods valued at not more than $250 is $3, and the fine for failure to present a certified invoice when required is three times the prescribed fee in addition to the fee itself.

Antimony Speculators Lose Out.

Speculators who tied up large sums of money in Chinese antimony, which is used in the making of ammunition, in the hope of reaping great profits are now rueing their greediness, according to Consul General Sammons, who is at Shanghai. They failed to take into consideration, he says, the fact that the high prices brought by antimony would stimulate its production in other parts of the world. The result was that when large shipments began to be made from Bolivia and Spain prices dropped, the speculators lost money, and many Chinese mines and works had to discontinue operations.

Swedish Match Trusts Combine.

Vice Consul A. E. J. Reilly, who is stationed at Stockholm, has notified the Department of Commerce that a combination has been effected between the two large Swedish match trusts—Jönköpings & Vulcans Tändsticksfabriks Aktiebolag and Forenade Tändsticksfabrikerna. The combination will have a capital stock of about $22,000,000 and will control not only the domestic but also the foreign branches of the industry. Foreign factories are operated in Norway, Finland, Russia and England.

Don't waste anything—eat the paper label on the loaf of bread—it is as nutritious as some breakfast foods. And, speaking of cereals, an old whisk broom chopped fine, covered with real cream and plenty of sugar, makes an excellent morning dish. If you have no hose handy, water the garden with your tears. Save your empty tin cans. They may be straightened out and used to mend the leaky roof. CONGESTION FEARED IN SUBWAY STATION

Public Service Commission Is Blamed for Anticipated Conditions at 42d Street.

FAIL TO REMEDY DEFECTS

Traffic Plans, It Is Said, Were Drawn Before Difficulties at Other Points Were Encountered.

The Public Service Commission is blamed by the Engineering News-Record for the conditions which are anticipated at the Forty-second Street express station of the new Broadway subway line which is to be in operation early next year. It is charged in the November issue of the publication that members of the commission were at fault in failing to remedy defective plans, which were drawn before the difficulties caused by extreme congestion at the Grand Central station and at other points had been encountered. The article says:

"Under this old plan, the passengers can enter and leave the 500-foot island express platform only at the ends. These express platforms are more than two stories below the street. The exit stairs provided will also be used by incoming passengers—an inexcusable blunder of design under any circumstances—as they are only five feet wide between walls. Four of these stairs are to take care of half of the total traffic at this station, which may well become the busiest of the entire dual system."

The publication asserts that these faults of design were recognized and acknowledged by Public Service Commissioners and engineers, and that they expressed the intention of remedying them, but failed to do so, and will be justly chargeable with the responsibility if intolerable congestions develop at this station. After reviewing the discussions of a change of plans to increase entrance and exit facilities, which ended with a refusal by the Public Service Commission to adopt suggested remedies, on the ground that the contractor had inserted an item of $1,800 to cover costs of material which had increased during the period of hesitation about changes, the article continues:

"The amount involved is said to have been less than $1,800. Although the contractor denies any intention of holding up the work on account of it, the entire handling of the affair is said to have been so offensive that it soon became evident to the contractor and his legal advisers that there was no use in pursuing the subject further while the commission looked at it in that light. The commission was notified that, as it would not adjust these items, the contractor would not sign the agreement.

"Of course it is always possible for the engineers concerned to advance the argument that the contractor by selfishly grasping after a paltry $1,800 held up this needed improvement in the new transit system. It is also possible to assert, as has been done on the part of the commission, that this and other changes were proposed by the contracting firm to recoup heavy losses faced on the original contract because of changed conditions since it had been let. Even if proved, this charge is not of a criminal nature. On private projects it is considered poor financial policy for an owner to compel the execution of a contract under such conditions.

"Furthermore, neither of these arguments would hold water, even if the contracting firm concerned were seven times the essence of greed. It is hardly the business of the contracting firm under circumstances such as those related to see that the design of the structure it builds is suited to the needs of the owner. It is most emphatically the duty of the Public Service Commission and of its engineering staff to see to this point, and no action by third parties can possibly relieve it of this obligation to the city.

"The damage done to this city, while serious, is temporary and of a pecuniary nature. It will not be long after the line is in operation before public protest will force the city to dig up this station and reconstruct it in a proper manner—at greatly increased expense."

AUSTRALIAN AIRMEN ACTIVE.

Men of New Corps in Service on the Western Front.

BEHIND THE BRITISH LINES IN FRANCE, Oct. 20, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—More than one squadron of the new Australian flying corps is now at work on the western front. An Australian has already brought down a German, and another is missing after a flight over German territory.

An Australian airman was attacked by several Germans the other day and brought down in No Man's Land. A British officer, seeing the machine fall, went out from the trenches alone to attempt rescue. For the first part of the way he managed to keep under cover, but the last part was open.

Just before he reached the machine he was hit, but went on, and found the Australian lying in a shell hole, badly wounded. The British officer crawled back with this information, and the Germans later permitted the man to be brought in under a white flag. Both men are recovering.

LAWYER AND THE LAW.

Some Views from Florida on the Administration of Justice.

The President of the Florida Bar Association has delivered an address to his professional brethren which deserves and should command the close attention of the people as well. Senator Bryan spoke to other lawyers as to technical policies—to them he may have been learned or brilliant in his exposition of the responsibilities and the ethics of their profession. But every thoughtful man and woman may receive valuable instruction when he goes down to the foundations and shows how the principles should be manifested in practical work.

It is an axiom worthy of all acceptation that "the first duty of the State is to dispense justice;" Senator Bryan points the moral when he advances another step and declares "Justice is in the keeping of the legal profession." If we agree that substantial justice is denied in this land of the free and home of the brave today, who is responsible for this lamentable fact? Without blenching, Senator Bryan says the lawyers of the State and of the nation are responsible. Here is a charge most weighty if true; for its truth one of the foremost lawyers vouches. What will the lawyers do about it? What will the people do about it?

Senator Bryan says:

> The rights of the majority and the greatest good to the greatest number were not supposed to be superior in the administration of justice to the most insignificant constitutional right of the humblest individual in all the land. I believe in this system. I believe that unless power and right co-exist there can be no justice. But whether it is wise or not, it is the system under which we live. There is ample machinery to remedy any fault in the administration of justice in whatever department it may lie. To this end it is the duty of lawyers to lend their aid.

Here is a great truth admirably expressed—it is a doctrine embraced in the Magna Charta, inherited from our English ancestors, declared in the Declaration of Independence, and made the basis of our whole system of government; to deny it is to declare a negation of our history. But what are we doing every day? We find that a Postmaster may declare his knowledge of matter that comes sealed into his care. We find that the people listen and seem to heed when the legal representative of a constituency in a Congressional Chamber is denounced as "disloyal to the President" and condemned as the supporter of a public enemy—the "friend of the Kaiser!" Shall the supposed "rights of the majority" deny a hearing to this constituency? May "the welfare of the nation" close the mouth of a man even when he speaks his own sentiments? For there are statutes that limit the right of speech—that right is not to be restricted by cries of "disloyalty" to any man nor yet of sympathy with any man! Washington said that when we grew careless of our rights we would deserve to lose them.

We would earnestly bespeak a careful study of Senator Bryan's address—we cannot reproduce it and we cannot do it justice by comment on selected portions. Let us then ask why we should give more power to the lawyers who have been adjudged careless or incompetent with respect to the power already in their hands. The speaker admits that justice is both denied and delayed—he admits the responsibility of the lawyers; then he asks that lawyers exercise more influence in selecting Judges because "We know the qualifications of lawyers for the bench better than any one else." So they do, but is it our experience that lawyers support one of their number for a place on the bench because of the candidate's fitness or competence? Assure us of that and we would pray that lawyers be allowed greater weight in the selection of all other officials—we might be willing to have the American Bar Association name several candidates from which number we could select a President; that they legislate for us—almost that they expend the proceeds of taxation for us.

But why should we expect lawyers to prove themselves better advocates of law and justice and good government in the future than they have been in the past? There's the rub. Will the lawyers kindly begin to show us that they are living up to the standards laid down by Mr. Taft and Mr. Bryan, respectively, or must we accept them by faith or reject them in toto according to the former practice? It is up to them.—Florida Times-Union.

DR. FINLEY URGES LOYALTY IN SCHOOLS

State Education Commissioner Says Each One Should Be Centre of Patriotism.

DUTY FOR EVERY TEACHER

Should Give Accurate Information About the War and Tell Children Obligations to Nation's Cause.

At a time when members of the New York City Board of Education are trying to rid the schools of disloyal teachers and influences Dr. John H. Finley, State Commissioner of Education, contributes an article to the current issue of The World Court in which he says that now, while we are at war, more than ever, each school should be a national centre for the teaching of patriotism and loyalty to the ideals for which this nation is fighting.

"This is an adult's war," he writes, "but the schoolhouse doors cannot shut its sounds away from the ears of our children. We must tell them what it means and guide their interest through tangible forms of service in the high cause to which we are committed as a nation. I have opposed giving the gun end of preparation and service to the youth as the only form of valor training, but I have for years been advocating a conscription beyond that of bare elementary training—a conscription that would lead every youth to realize his obligation to the community, the State, and the nation, which, together with the family, make his free development possible."

"More and more," writes Dr. Finley, "are we coming to think of the school as the community or neighborhood centre. And more and more we are, in the schools, coming, I think, to regard our work as a volunteer service rather than a means of livelihood. But now our schools become suddenly recognized, under the message of our Schoolmaster President and under the appeals of our nation's immediate needs, both to teachers and to pupils, as national centres—centres through which these national needs may come to the knowledge of all the people, centres from and through which patriotic sentiment will express itself and patriotic service will give itself. It is with the desire of helping every country school, no matter how small, to see its national horizon that I am moved to say this word out of my own busy days to superintendents, principals, teachers, and trustees, and even children, and young men and women who find their days already too short for what they would do. What I say to you is only what I say to myself, that there is now no minute for a use that will not be helpful to the cause upon which our free institutions depend.

"1. The school is first of all a centre for that mental and moral training which is essential to the maintenance of a democracy. In New York State we have more than ten thousand of these centres, and every one of them has its obligations to see that every boy and every girl within its allotted range has not only his or her opportunity, but that every one shall take advantage of it. It is universal conscription for the future State as clearly as our draft law makes conscription for the defense of the present.

"2. The school is (in New York State) now a centre for physical training and health education for every boy and girl of compulsory school age, 8 years old or over, and for every boy and girl who remains in elementary or high school after compulsory school. This is a provision that should make for the happiness and health of millions in the years to come, and against such unfavorable physical and health conditions as those reported as a result of the draft examinations.

"3. The school is the centre for such Red Cross activities as boys and girls are able to give under a plan which grew largely out of what the New York schools did last year—a plan which was approved by President Wilson in his message to the schools.

"4. The school is a centre for food production activities, and for food conservation in ways suggested by the Federal, State, and municipal administration.

"5. The school is a centre for accurate information about the war, information about Government needs, information about opportunities and duties for personal patriotic service. No teacher or pupil can claim exemption from the obligation entailed on each partner of the nation in this war of civilization.

"For all this the school is the most available centre that the nation has, and we must make it a potent one. The nation looks to the State for this particular service."

COWS A RUSSIAN BULLY.

Canadian Challenges Him to Lift, Jump, or Fight.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 1, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Klondike methods as exemplified by Lieut. Col. John W. Boyle of the Canadian militia, who was sent by the American Committee in London to aid in restoring the Russian transportation system, recently disposed of a presumptuous exponent of freedom who questioned Boyle's right to investigate problems confronting the Russian Army. Lieut. Col. Boyle has been engaged for four months in improving the transport conditions along the Russian and Rumanian fronts.

At a certain point on the Russian front the Chairman of a soldiers' commission, to whom Boyle was referred for necessary information, met him in an uncivil mood, and impertinently answered one question with another calculated to rouse the Canadian's temper.

"Were you sent here because you were the best man they could find on the French front?" queried the nagging committeeman.

"Possibly so," was the reply. "Now, answer me this: Are you the best man in your committee?"

"I am."

"What is your rank?"

"I am a soldier."

"It is unbecoming in me to start an argument with a soldier," said Boyle, who saw that he must either subdue his antagonist or fall in his quest. "But this is what I propose to you. I take off my uniform," proceeding in the meantime to lay aside his cap, "barness," and uniform coat, "and meet you man to man. Now you name any job that you think you can do better than I can, from lifting or jumping to fighting, and I will take you on."

The interpreter, a young officer, interpreted the words.

"Tell this chap," continued Boyle, "that if he fails to best me in whatever he chooses, he must go away from here and not interfere in my affairs, or I shall give him the best beating he has had since he was a child."

The bully held a brief conference with his fellows and went away. He may have had an inkling that Boyle was once the heavyweight boxing champion of the Canadian Northwest.

Anzacs to Erect War Memorials.

CAIRO, Oct. 10, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—One of the finest war memorials in the world is to be erected in Egypt by Australian soldiers as a tribute to their comrades who have fallen in Egypt and Palestine. Every Australian soldier here has subscribed $1.25 to the fund. The memorial will consist of a broken column of great size, to be placed on the bank of the Suez Canal. New Zealanders will erect a similar monument at Bir-el-Abd, where many of their comrades fell in the Romani battle.
